Twilight's Length.

The belief that there is little or no twilight within the great tropical belt encircling our planet is a very wide-spread one. History, however, warns us that beliefs need not necessarily accord with facts. It might indeed almost be said that they usually do not.

The toiling and mulling millions, the humble units that, taken in the bulk, constitute what we call a "great power," have neither the time nor the inclination to overhaul their opinions. They are not assailed by doubts as to whether the intellectual coffee which they have at odd moments imbibed may not have been most chiecy. Such a taste of mind unquestionably makes more happiness, and although such happiness may bear rather too much resemblance to that of say the cow, it is none the less real for all that.

Twilight is at its shortest at the equator and increases with the latitude—at about the equinoxes—at about the same rate as that at which the meridians decrease their distance from one another. The increase is, therefore, very slow in low latitudes and very rapid near the poles.

Practical or civil twilight is the time which elapses between the moment of the sun's setting and the moment when he is seven degrees of a great circle below the horizon. At the equator this time cannot, of course, be less than 28 minutes. At the edges of the tropic zone it is about 31 minutes.

A person with good eyesight will, should he care to make the experiment, find that when at sea and on or near the equator he is able to read average type on deck for at least 28 minutes after the sun has set without the aid of artificial light and when there is no moon light.

This is the common sense experiment of which the duration is considerably longer than the practical, and even the equator something like 70 minutes will elapse before night holds undisputed sway. This is the length of the true, the astronomical twilight.

It is at or near the equinoxes that the phenomenon under consideration is at its shortest all over the globe. At those periods it lasts at Honolulu 30 minutes; at San Francisco, 35; at London, 45; at St. Petersburg, 57; at the Arctic and Antarctic circles, 72, and at the poles, 18 days. When then, we say that the poles have six months light and six months' darkness, it is little more than a facon de parler.

The north pole has no less than 292 days of practical daylight each year, the south pole 215 days, and the equator 197 days. Nansen, when in high northern latitudes, was able to read The Verdensgang many days before the longest for sunrise following the long winter night. The great length of the twilight in polar regions is a boon indeed to explorers. The popular imagination usually attaches itself to the great cold they have to endure, but the real enemy is the long darkness, which is trying to the enthusiasm of even a Nansen, Peary or a Jackson.

There is practically no difference in the length of the twilight at the equator at the equinoxes and solstices. Even at Honolulu it will not vary by more than a couple of minutes. But in the higher latitudes the varying duration is very marked. In latitude 59½ degrees, for instance, it lasts 56 minutes at the equinoxes, but, in the summer solstice it lasts from sunset till sunrise—that is to say, from 9:10 o'clock till 2:50, or five hours and 40 minutes.

North or south of 84 degrees practical twilight lasts all "night" at the equinox. The sun is, it is true, only 12 hours above the horizon, but as he cannot go more than 7 degrees below it there is continual daylight for the 24 hours. In such cities as Stockholm and St. Petersburg there are close on to 14 hours of daylight at those seasons when day and night are said to be equal, and at the equator itself the day all the year round is made of 13 hours' daylight and 11 hours' darkness. It must not be forgotten that in those latitudes where the sun remains for months below the horizon there is during that period a good deal of daylight, so that along the eightieth parallel north (a little north of which the Jackson-Harmsworth expedition spent three consecutive years in the Franz Josef islands,) although the sun does not rise between Oct. 19th and Feb. 22nd, there is a period of three weeks following the final sunset and another of the same length preceding the first sunrise of the year, on each day of which good type can be read for a few minutes up to some hours without artificial light.—Exchange.

Two Tours to Canada via Pennsylvania Railroad.

For the summer of 1899 the Pennsylvania Railroad company has arranged to run two personally-conducted tours to Canada and Northern New York.

For detailed itinerary, tickets, or any additional information, address Geo. W. Boyd, Assistant Passenger Agent, Broad Street Station, Philadelphia.

The physicians at the Pennsylvania hospital in Philadelphia, after giving it a fair trial, have expressed the opinion that the anti-toxin treatment of tetanus, or lock-jaw, is of little or no value, nearly all cases tried yielding a negative result. The enormous increase in the number of persons who received wounds July 4th this year and died from resulting tetanus is awakening deep interest in medical circles, and causing students to make every exertion towards the discovery of some treatment or method by which the disease can be combated. In New York city alone the number of deaths from this cause in the past two weeks have numbered thirty-two, most of the victims being boys who were wounded in the hand by pistols. Of 141 lives lost in the United States from injuries received during the last Fourth of July celebration, lock-jaw caused the death of eighty-three.

Luetgert, the Chicago Sausage-Maker, Who Boiled His Wife in a Vat, Dies in a Prison Cell.

Groaning in agony and lying helpless upon the cot in his cell Adolph Luetgert, the convicted wife-murderer, was found last Friday morning by a prison guard in the Joliet prison, Joliet, Ill. While he was being carried into the corridor in the hope that fresh air would revive him he died.

It was at first supposed that the famous criminal had brought about his own death by poison, but Dr. O'Malley, the prison physician insists the cause of death was rheumatism. The coroner's jury returned a verdict of death "From cause unknown."

Luetgert's passing away marks the closing chapter of one of the most greivous murder mysteries in the annals of criminology. His death to the law, which was fixed by a jury at life imprisonment, has been wiped out.

Luetgert was 53 years old and at one time a wealthy sausage maker. He encountered financial trouble early in 1897. On the night of May 1st, he invited his wife, Louise, to visit his factory. That was the last she was seen alive. Luetgert was arrested a week later and at the two trials which followed it was proved that the sausage maker first killed his wife and then disintegrated her body in a large vat by means of powerful acids. In the first trial the jury disagreed, in the second he was convicted and sentenced to a life term.

Luetgert was brought here in March, 1898, and at first was put to work in the cannery. He was then changed to the cold storage department where he was given charge of the meats. For the past few days he had been greatly excited over the application made by his son for a guardian. In the papers filed by the son he states that his father is in prison and his mother is dead.

The latter statement was the one that had caused Luetgert to feel very greatly wrought up. Luetgert never admitted his wife was dead. One day last week Luetgert got into an altercation with one of Armour & Company's men over the meat furnished, and became quite refractory.

He had to be placed in solitary confinement as a punishment for his conduct. This morning at 5:30 o'clock, when the convicts first marched from their cells, Luetgert came down with them, and to all appearances there was nothing wrong with him. He marched out to the yard with his gaug, his cell bucket on his arm. Then the convicts were faced about and marched back for their breakfast. As Luetgert passed the ration table he took up the pan containing his portion and a cup of coffee and went to his cell.

NOT IN LINE. At 6:45 the signal for work was sounded and every convict on the gallery sprang from his cell into the line, but the guard noticed that Luetgert was not in his place.

A convict spoke up and said: "Sir, there is something the matter with the big fellow, as I heard him grunting in his cell." The cell house keeper went direct to Luetgert's cell, opened the door and found him stretched out on his bed breathing heavily and unconcious. His breakfast was upon the stool untouched. The keeper summoned the prison physician and the dying wife murderer was carried out in the corridor, where he gasped once or twice for breath and then fell back dead.

A coroner's jury to investigate the cause of death was at once summoned, and, after hearing the evidence, returned a verdict that Luetgert was not in his place. A juror expressed his opinion that it was heart disease. The prison authorities will hold a post-mortem examination to fully determine the cause of death.

Several prominent physicians will assist at the examination. Luetgert's sons arrived at the prison this evening, and the remains were taken to Chicago for burial.

ONE RAY OF HOPE. When Luetgert was sentenced to the penitentiary he went there with a ray of hope that some day his wife, whom he and his attorney came to believe still living, would make herself known to be alive and thus relieve her husband of a living death behind the bars. She has not done so. "In admitting she is not dead, convince the condemning public that an innocent man has been persecuted."

"I Am Innocent" on Luetgert's Coffin. Thousands Attend the Funeral of the Man Who Boiled His Wife Alive. CHICAGO, July 30.—Thousands of persons attended to-day the funeral of Adolph Luetgert, the wife murderer, who died at the Joliet penitentiary.

Prominent in the group about the bier at the Northwest Turner Hall were Luetgert's three children near a floral pillow with the inscription: "Our Father's Words, I Am Innocent."

Lawrence Harmon, former counsel for Luetgert, delivered an address at the close of which he said: "He is dead, but his wife lives. I call on Louise Luetgert, the missing woman for whom he suffered, without ever uttering an unkind word regarding her, to come forth and remove the unmerited stain from the name of the father and her innocent children."
