FARM NOTES.

-Milk that contains blood indicates that the cow has received an injury to the udder from some cause. Wash the udder with warm water twice a day, the water to be as warm as the cow can bear it; wipe dry and gently rub the udder with the towel until considerable heat is created. For warts on the udder apply castor oil after each milk-ing, washing the udder with warm water when the cow is next milked.

-The old canes of raspberries and blackberries are of no further use, having fulfilled their mission and should be removed late in the fall and burned, as by so do-ing the borers will also be destroyed, as well as the spores of the raspberry disease known as anthracnose, which gives so much difficulty to the growers of raspberries. All refuse material between the rows, such as dead crabgrass, weeds, etc., should also be removed and consigned to the flames as a the bodice. precaution against disease.

—The girding or ringing of grapevines is done to increase the size of each cluster. It is not extensively practiced, however, although some find the method profitable.

The bark is entirely removed below the fruit cluster about a month before the period of ripening, which hastens ripening a week or two in advance and enlarges the bunch and berries. The sap ascends through the pores of the wood to sustain growth, but the elaborated sap descends between the wood and the bark, and can go no lower than the point at which the girdle is made, where it stops and is utilized in feeding the grapes. Some injury is done the vine below the girdle, and it may not pay to girdle on an extensive scale.

With some the interest in the fruit garden ceases at the close of the fruiting period. This is why such persons fail with small fruits. As soon as the picking sea-son is over the strawberry, raspberry, blackberry, gooseberry, and currant patches should be treated to a thorough course of cultivation. If the ground has been tramped hard, the first work should be the use of a one-horse turning plow run just deep enough to turn the soil nicely, throwing the furrow from the plants. Next use some kind of a harrow that will work between the rows. Level and pulverize the soil completely, after which any small-toothed cultivator may be used, giving shallow cultivation. Use the hoe and spade to clean out and loosen the ground in the row. If humus is lacking, it may now be applied to the land and well mixed into the ground.

Well-rotted compost or leaf moreld with the land and well mixed into the ground. is clear of weed or grass seed, is the best. Pinch out the terminal bud of the new stocks of blackberry and raspberry, black or red, when twenty inches or two feet high. This will cause laterals to come out on the stalk, forming diminutive trees, giving more fruiting wood to the stalk. Continue the cultivation until the middle of August with all small fruit. If this rule is followed each season, after the fruiting there will be no complaints to enter against the small fruit garden. The old stalks of blackberry and raspberry should be cut out, and the hills thinned to three, four or five good canes any time in October. Gather all rubbish and burn it, as by this means many insects will be destroyed. If oats are sowed before the last cultivation and plowed under they will make quite a strong growth organdie. Tuck this also across and put a When the oats are killed by severe freezing they will make a good mulch and protect the plants during winter. Gooseberries and currants should have some stable manure about the hills alternate seasons, put on as soon as cold weather comes, and worked into the ground next spring as early as the ground can be cultivated.

ANIMAL ODORS IN MILK .- To find out how animal odor gets into milk, I took two one-pint Mason fruit jars, washed then perfectly clean, adjusted the rubber rings, screwed the covers down, and took them to a stable at milking time. The air in the stable seemed to be moderately pure, probably not better than the average in such buildings. As soon as a cow was milked the cans were filled two thirds full of the warm milk, and the cover of one screwed on tightly, and the can at once submerged in very cold running water until thoroughly chilled, then placed upon a shell until morning. The other can was allowed to remain open on a shelf back of the cows until after supper, when it was closed up for the night. In the morning both cans were shaken up, opened, and tested for odor. No mistake in determining the one left open need have been made; in fact, a man was called who detected the stable odor in this one without previously knowing of its presence. The sample which was chilled also had an odor, but not an objectionable one. Each sample was then poured into a glass flask and slowly heated. As they warmed up the open one gave off a noticeably disagreeable odor, which entirely disappeared a little later. The other, or the chilled can, showed nothing offensive during the heating. In fact, it gave off a rather clean, pleasant odor, such as emanates from pure milk while heating. The indications from this single test are that the odor imparted by the cow in the milk while yet in the udder was not in this instance, at least, of such a nature or of sufficient quantity to demand aeration.

The exposure of the milk to the stable atmosphere for a short period only caused an amount of odor which made it highly desirable to remove it by some such means as aerating or heating. The fact that the odor passed away on heating the milk indicates that pasteurizing is one of the most efficient means of ridding milk of odors, not to mention its powers of destroying fermenta-

Aeration, which depends solely upon air the head. which is either forced into the milk or which comes in contact with milk in a finely divided state, has its fields of usefulness and is successful in removing odors. Such aerating is much valued by cheese nakers and others, and if the air brought in con-tact with the milk in aeration is of low temperature and free from germs, this method cannot fail to be of great service; but as these requisites are an uncertain supply with most of us, especially during the summer months, when most needed, we still hold to the idea of clean milking by clean hands in as pure an atmosphere as obtainable, followed by rapid chilling and agitation—the latter omitted, of course, in case the milk is to be creamed by the grav- is a decoration easily secured by the simple

FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN.

The children who are not kept employed will get into michief. If you do not find them an occupation they will find one for themselves, and it will, most likely, be one to which you will say: "Don't do that!"
Find the children employment and so cultivate their tastes and help them to form good habits. Make it a rule that anything begun must be finished. Whatever is done must be done to the best of the little one's ability, and neatness and care should always be encouraged and praised.

An expert piece of needlework is shown in a stunning little bodice that is made all by hand. It is composed entirely of alternating bands of tucked turquoise blue taffeta and triple rows of cream lace beading sewn together. Black velvet baby ribbon is run through the beading. At the back the stripes and tucks run either across or up and down, according to the width of the figure. In the front, however, the lines all

To make good chili sauce, take twelve large ripe tomatoes, three green peppers, two onions, two tablespoonfuls of salt, two of sugar, one of cinnamon, three cups of vinegar; peel the tomatoes and onions and chop them separately very fine, chop the peppers and add to the other ingredients, boil one hour and a half. This sauce, bottled and sealed, will keep for a long time.

The high turned over collar is more popular than ever. With shirt waists the ties that can be laundried are in greatest favor as they have that immaculate freshness, or at least they should have it, that is the sine qua non of summer gowns. The stocks of pique are most attractive this year, and hey seem to have grown taller than ever. Charming ties of madras and crepe in lovely pink, blue, maure and raspberry, striped with white are worn with them.

One of the small changes in the summer fashions is this spacing of everything. One puts tucks an inch apart this month and puts ruffles their entire width apart. Nothing overlaps. In many cases the spacing between the ruffles is given over to bands of ribbon or embroidery or tucks, but it is equally fashionable to leave the space bare and much less trouble for a muslin gown. The square yoke is much newer than the round one. The round ones were "rushed" so violently all the spring that women who outside of the arm as it is possible and yet give freedom for the sleeve. To finish the yoke the beading is newer than the ruffles, but either one may be used. If you have not a full chest do not make your yoke too long. These long yokes are only becoming on full chested women.

For your muslin gown, I should suggest that you make a sailor blouse, nothing is more fashionable for cotton gowns than a sailor blouse. Cut this blouse on the bias, or if you are very long waisted, cut it across the goods if it has a stripe in it. Make your sailor blouse plain in the back. Tuck the front across in little bunches of fine tucks, with a good spacing between each one. Make the chemisette of lace embroidery or plain sailor collar of white pique or white embroidery; bring it down to the end of the chemisette and there fasten it with a big bow of lace Nothing is more fashionable than these sailor collars. They must be well cut, however, and try on a pattern that is becoming to you before you slash into your cloth. If you are short waisted do not wear a sailor collar that is deep in the back.

The time-honored and generally considered invincible sailor is dreadfully outstripped by a slouch hat of felt, made brave by a long stiff quill, and these latter favorites have the advantage of shielding the light from the eyes and are so easily secur ed on the head.

It is said that the fall season of 1899 will be one of the best plaid seasons that we have had for several years. There seems to be a demand on the part of our women in gen-eral for extremes in materials. They want a tailor made suit which is simplicity itself and then they want something striking by way of change, and of course nothing will suit them but a plaid skirt, and the larger the plaid the better they like it.

A man can get ready for a journey in five minutes, but a woman is never really prepared for it, even after she has started on

A more becoming style of hairdressing than the pompadour roll is at last coming into favor, and puffs or small rolls, and even the parted bang are used, where formerly the pompadour held undisputed sway.

A very fluffy, or curly roll is also a pleasing modification, and large or small genuine shell combs, soften stiff outlines, or hold natural curls in subjection. Shell pins in butterfly shapes bring about pretty effects, and white or colored satin ribbon bows harmonize with youth and beauty; for matrons or elderly ladies, however, nothing is more particularly elegant than a large old-time carved tortoise shell comb.

This lifting of the eyebrows is a senseless trick, which is thought to give expression to the face. It is on a level with many other so-called tricks of expression, really nothing more than contortions of the facia muscles. It is rare to find a woman who can carry on a conversation with an even countenance and without nods and wags of ing.

In the evening every woman who keeps abreast with the mode, pins her little fan at her belt to the right side. First she makes a small perfectly flat satin ribbon rosette with a bright imitation gem in its centre, and from this hangs a four-inch long strap or ribbon, on the end of which is fastened a gold safety slip ring. The ring, of course, secures the fan when the wearer does not need it, and it is perfectly easily detached from the ring when she does.

A fan-tailed pigeon is what you should wear in your hair at the country dances. It method of tying a scarf of perfectly fresh, crisp white tulle in a large wide-winged bow, and fastening it at any point you please in your hair by aid of a jewel-head-
