In addition, the girl was confined in a dungeon for six days and half starved. In its main feature this horrible story has been confirmed by Miss Day, a reputable employee of the school, who resigned rather than be a witness of what went on there. Dr. Rogers, the surgeon who performed the operation which Sadie Weisman could not survive, is thus quoted :

The body of the girl showed a condition which might readily have resulted from such ill treatment as she alleged was inflicted upon her. Severe strait-jacket treatment might have produced the kidney trouble. Her condition was certainly due to something out of the ordinary way of living of a young girl. The new board of managers of the institution is to make an investigation. That is well as far as it goes. The State society for the Amelioration of the condition of prisoners is to be asked to take legal action. That is better. A court room is the proper place to try Mrs. Eyler. And if guilty the law provides no punishment too severe for her.

About 8 o'clock the wedding guests aros from a banqueting table and began to make preparations for the dance that was to follow the young husband and his wife remaining seated side by side at the head of the table.

Suddenly there was a crash of glass, a flash of light and the roar of a gunshot, quickly collowed by a second shot. The guests upon rushing back into the banqueting-room found Mr. and Mrs. Walker dead in their chairs, but clasped in each other's arms, the young wife having endeavored to shield her husband with her body. Blood flowed in a stream from the head removed from the table.

A search was at once instituted for the assassin. Out in the shrubbery was found the dead body of Charles Rankin, a rejected suitor of the bride. He had blown the top of his head off with a shotgun, pulling the trigger with his toe. Rankin left a note telling of his intention to kill the couple because the woman had jilted him, and asking the Odd Fellows to take charge of his remains. He was buried Wednesday. The young bride and groom were placed side by side in the grave.
