Picture Frame Moldings.

Picture frame moldings, such as are manufactured and sold by wholesale in strips to be cut up as may be required in the making of picture frames, are produced in lengths of 12 feet. They are produced in pretty nearly all natural woods. There are also produced cheaper some of these woods, as of oak. These various moldings are made in many widths and many thicknesses and in great variety of form, great numbers of them with no ornamentation whatever and many of them ornamented with a beading or other design, which may be carved in the wood by the machine in which the molding is made or pressed or stamped in the wood. Sometimes this beading is gilded or treated as to look like oxidized metal, and sometimes a straight, smooth line or division of a wood molding is finished in the same manner.

Many picture frame moldings are finished in white, some in white with another color, some are made in combinations of colors and some are made in single colors, and these last may be made in many shades. There is a variety of moldings in fact in design, and there are among them many that are odd. And there are many of the colored moldings that are highly ornamented. Of gilded picture frame moldings the variety produced is very large. Some are gilded with gold, some with a lacquer laid on over silver leaf and some are gilded with a cheaper material.

Another physical characteristic of those who live long is that they are invariably small and frugal. The enormous physiological task of digesting and excreting daily pounds of food not needed by the organism is not performed by the frugal eater, and so he has more vitality to expend in thought, in working and in living out his century. We live not so much because of what we eat as because of what we do not eat. Much has been written on the subject of longevity, but little of the today possesses any beyond a merely literary interest.

The influence of occupation, of climate, of stimulants, of location, of race and breeding upon longevity opens interesting fields for discussion, but affects the matter only indirectly. To recapitulate: The four leading characteristics of the individual who attains longevity are large thorax, deep, full, slow breathing, muscular relaxation and frugal habits regarding diet.—Health Culture.

The First Coaches in London.

Riding was the only alternative to walking at the beginning of Elizabeth's reign, and a lady never rode without six or seven serving men to carry attire suitable to all contingencies and the menus to repair a toilet which might suffer on the journey. To diminish this cost coachmen came into use. They were introduced in 1564 by a Dutch coachman of the queen, but we are told "a coach was a strange monster in those days, and the sight of it put both man and horse into amazement; some said it was a great crab shell brought out of China, and some imagined it to be one of the pagan temples in which the cannibals worshiped the devil." But at length these doubts were cleared and coachmaking became a substantial trade.

Lock in Finding Mines.

Something like 250 years ago an Indian, while climbing up the steep slope of a hill in pursuit of an antelope, seized a bush to help himself up. The plant gave way, and the Indian fell backward, but by a desperate effort saved himself and, falling forward, cut the end of his nose on the sharp point of a projecting rock. The Indian looked ruefully at the point of the rock that had done the damage and, to his surprise, saw that it was almost pure silver. This is how the famous silver mines of Zacatecas, Mexico, are said to have been discovered.

Marks of Long Life.

Long life is not an accident. It is not even an inheritance, for the inheritance of physical vitality suffices to make a contentarian may be dissipated away in 20 years of riotous living. The scion of a long lived race may die early (as he often has died) of debility or wasting disease induced by unhygienic living. On the other hand, a small stock of vital force husbanded carefully may often prolong life to a healthy and efficient old age.

A careful examination will show that certain physical characteristics are usually associated with longevity. Perhaps the most noticeable of these is carriage. Ninety-nine out of a hundred people have curvature of the spine. The octogenarian is the hundredth man. His spine is a straight line, his head erect, his chest broad and deep. This means that the vital organs are properly supported by the attachments provided by nature and that they do not rest upon and crowd each other. The heart, lungs, stomach, liver and kidneys are thus enabled to do their work unimpeded, and their activity in providing food for the tissues and in removing waste matter—which is the prime cause of disease—is a potent factor in longevity. A large trunk, a chest short in proportion, a straight spine and an erect carriage are among the most obvious characteristics of those who attain great age.

Another characteristic, less evident to the untrained observer, but equally important, is the habit of slow, deep respiration. The oxygen is the only real food, for only the matter oxidized in the system becomes tissue. Deep, full breathing means an immensely increased amount of oxygen and it is equally augmented quantity of poisonous matter eliminated by the lungs. Mental quietude is essential to proper breathing. The excited man, the emotional individual, who suffocates with joy, palpitates with enthusiasm, chokes with rage, gasps with astonishment, sighs from the intensity of his attachments—the emotional individual by every inequality in his respiration abbreviates his life.

Another physical characteristic of longevity, most important of all and seldom or never noticed, is ease and repose of movement. The old person—the hale, vigorous, healthy old man—moves easily, lightly, silently. He has always small and graceful movements of movement. Muscular relaxation is impossible except when the mind is tranquil.

KENILWORTH.

Towering above the plain, proud in decay— Her tendered lilies, like a woman's hair, Veiling her hurt and hiding her despair— The monument of a departed day. The shadow of a glory passed away, Stands Kenilworth, stripped of her pomp and bare

Of all that made her so supremely fair When power with love contended for her sway. In this wide ruin, solemn and serene, Where moved majestic a virgin queen, The pernicked stuns, his ominous plumes outspread, And here, where casting an immortal spell A sad and girlish presence seems to dwell, The wild bird nests and circles overhead. —Florence Earle Coates in Atlantic.

Marlborough the Traitor.

Of all the traitors the worst was Marlborough, who, to buy a pardon from James, betrayed to him the expedition against Brest, causing thereby the failure of the expedition and the death of the gallant Talmash, its commander. No other British soldier has been guilty of a crime so foul. Excuses are vain. It is said that other traitors had given the information before Marlborough. Unless he knew it this makes no defense, and if he did know it he was bound to warn the government. He well deserved to be executed, or rather to be hanged. His apologists had better leave his case alone and let his political infamy be lost as far as it may in his military glory. He was a man, like Napoleon, devoid of moral sense. If he ever had any, he must have left it in the antechambers of Charles II. —"The United Kingdom," by Goldwin Smith.

Text of the Puerto Rican Bill.

WASHINGTON, March 16.—The text of the Puerto Rican bill, passed by the senate to-day, is as follows: Be it enacted, etc., that the sum of $2,095,455, being the amount of customs revenues received from importations by the United States from Puerto Rico since the evacuation of Puerto Rico by the Spanish forces on the 18th of October, 1898, to the 1st of January, 1900, shall be placed at the disposal of the president to be used for the government now existing, and which may hereafter be established, in Puerto Rico, and for public education, public works, and other governmental and public purposes therein, and the said sum, or so much there as may be necessary, is hereby appropriated for the purposes herein specified, out of any moneys in the treasury not otherwise appropriated.
