The Fad of Ordering Drugs.

When the woman in black handed two prescriptions to the drug clerk, she said: "I'll call for the medicine some time this evening. Give me a check, please." Before handing her the identification check the clerk figured for a moment. "One dollar and a quarter," he said. "It is customary to get a deposit on a call order that amounts to more than 50

The woman flushed indignantly. "Well," she said, "to be frank with you, I don't feel like paying it. I've been buying medicine and things at drug stores for a good many years, and this is the first time I have been asked to put up a de-posit. It is such an absurd request. You don't suppose for a minute that I'm going around getting prescriptions filled just for the fun of the thing, do you?"

The clerk sighed meekly. "Well," he said, "maybe you're not, but there are plenty of women who do. I hate to ask for a deposit. I'd almost as lief be cheated out of the money. I told the proprietor so. 'It looks small,' said I. 'Can't help it,' said he. 'We can't afford to mix three or form better of 'Can't help it,' said he. 'We can't afford to mix three or four bottles of expensive medicines every day for women who make a fed of ordering description. I found it lying on the floor where you must have dropped it." who make a fad of ordering drugs compounded that they never intend to call for.' And that's just what a lot of you women folks do," added the clerk, with a defiant attempt at self vindication. "Just this." Here he opened the door of a large cupboard at the rear of the store and pointed to the many rows of labeled bottles therein. "This is what we call the morgue," he said. "Every drug store has one. It is filled with the aftermath of the medicine fad. There must be upward of 300 bottles in that cupboard which are worth on an average 50 cents each. Every one of them has been ordered by women, the majority of whom probably never had any intention of calling for the concoction. Some of this medicine has been here for months. It probably never will be called for, but we shall keep it for an indefinite period anyway. Drugs once mixed are a dead loss to us, and we might as well hold them and thus take chances on final redemption as to throw them away."

"But what makes people order medicine that they never intend to use?" asked the woman.

The clerk sighed. "The Lord knows," less expensive. Doctors' bills generally and after a long silence rose and said:

"Mother, thee need not put me in thy be compounded free of charge unless a deposit is demanded from all except regular patrons. Not all these bottles you thing the hast, except the black marble have to be paid, whereas medicine can ar patrons. Not all these bottles you see here were filled from new prescriptions by any means. Many of them were She sat down, and another long silence tions by any means. Many of them were made up from copies of old prescriptions that were filled originally at other stores beth. I want it for myself." in good faith, and I doubt not that many of the compounds held in storage here could be duplicated in the morgue of many another drug store that has not yet

The hardest manual labor was assigned to them, and they suffered cruel punishments for the crimes of their fathers, husbands or brothers, as the case might be. Wills Women Make.

Many Reasons Why They Are Often Erratic -Unfamiliarity With Laws Governing the Devising of Property Is One Stumbling Block, and Their Own Changeable Minds Is Another.

In making her last will and testament a woman has much more to contend with than the superstition common to both than the superstition common to both.

This is what Miss Clara Pauline Van than the superstition common to both sexes-that the making of one's will hastens the approach of death. It is not a subject that either party likes to talk er female relative. Another disadvan-tage under which a woman labors is her own ignorance of the law of the state in which she lives and which may forbid her devising any of her property on a technicality of age, the consent of her husband—if married—and many conflicting red tape laws that serve as material for a long course of litigation on the part of her heirs. Finally her own changeable will ofers a serious stumbling block in the way of formulating a cast iron document which shall resist the tapse of years and repose peacefully in the iron add a codicil to her last will and testablame for this. The average woman is seldom the real owner of anything beyond a few gowns or rings of association.

She is pathetically poor in her own right, and some of the wills which these respectable paupers make are their own testimony to their state of indigence.

A woman of my acquaintance made her will, writing out on a single sheet of paper in unlegal language a disposal of her few expensive garments, such as "my new sealskin cloak," or specifying "my soltaire diamond engagement ring;" also "my watch set with diamonds," and then hid the document in her pocket and for-

A member of another family was always changing her will, as she quarreled frequently with those whom she had named as legatees. On one occasion she appeared at the door of the family sitting room and asked excitedly how they spelled the word "cross." She had forgotten, she said, whether it began with a "c" or a "k." They told her, and she went away. Then the members of that family looked at each other, and one of
