To the Granger.

It is our purpose to define the object of the Grange organization. The order is composed almost exclusively of agriculturists or farmers. The farmer concluded that he might be benefited in many ways modes of cultivating the soil in order to bring the best returns. The Grange, aside from matters pertaining to agriculture, has other features that make it quite entertain-ing and instructive. But the main object of the Grange is to fix a safe guard against encroachments upon the farmer.

encroachments upon the farmer. The success of business hinges upon the success of the farming interests. The tiller of the soil is a very important factor. He is the true source and main spring of all our national greatness. He is the bone, sinew and life-blood of our country. We are proud of our great warships. We are proud of our late military achievements, with many other great things, but stop for with many other great things, but stop for a moment and ask who furnished the motive power to accomplish the wonderful things. May I say the farmer? How could we build warships or how could sol-diers fight battles, if they had nothing to eat. Now, recognizing in the farmer so important a factor and agreeing that it is perfectly right for him to seek redress for his grievances through the Grange where
