UNCLE ELIJAH'S CHRISTMAS DIN-NER.

"Well, it can't be helped, girls, and there's no use crying over it." "That's exactly why we are crying, Joseph. If it could be helped, there'd be nothing to cry about. Are you sure Uncle Elijah means Penninah too?"

when I saw him last night? Eating mushrooms?"

Mrs. Joseph returned sharply. "Joseph you didn't eat any?" "No! He offered me some to bring home to you, but I told him I'd had too much trouble getting my family together, to run any such risks with it. Poor old man! He was eating away with the ends of his teeth, scared to death all the time for fear of a stray tooth!"

trouble of hunting. Sit down, dearie, and pass the coffee. Pen, bring your uncle Elijah right in here. Merry Christmas, father. Have some breakfast?"

Mr. Tousey stood in the doorway and looked over the table. He had once been a tall, eagle-faced man, with a hooked nose and erect bearing, and somewhere back in his youth had been called handsome. Now, from his roughly shorn hair to his thick gray hair, he had not one pleasing feature, with the exception of his eyes. These were dark and piercing whenever he opened the two gray-lidded boxes, that closed them in, but, as a rule, the bushy gray eyebrows less concealed this one remaining apology for his appearance. He spoke as if he found his pleasure in a staid mode of address.
