THE CROSS OF LILIES.

"You shall not go-I would rather see you dead at my feet."
"I shall go, father—some day." And so she went out of his life.

He was an old Puritan-grim, ascetic, dead to all pleasure and amusement. There were but three things for him: his Bible, his sword and his daughter. He had laid aside his sword, for he was growing old; but the Book was always by him, and he loved to interpret it in his own harsh fash- The Shortest and Quickest Line to Denion. And then his daughter-but she had

She was young and beautiful, panting for all that makes life sweet and grateful for love, for triumph, for the applause of thousands. She had resolved to be an act-ress and to have them all. She was stifled in that ugly square house in Scotland. So one day she disappeared and James Gordon was left alone with his Bible.

Meanwhile Ruth Gordon's name was on everyone's lips in London. Her beauty had brought her all she had ever dreamed, more than she ever could have hoped. It was the last night of the burlesque wherein she made herself famous. The house was crowded, and she excelled herself in every song and dance. At the close of the piece the stage was covered with bouquets from admirers—from men she knew and from men who wished to be known to her.

Then, when the curtain had gone down for the last time, she picked up one or two of the offerings and went off to the dressing room. One she held in her hand had attracted her by its uncommon shape and condition. It was a half-faded cross of white lilies. She threw it contemptuously on her table, and pressed the other—the gift of a young earl—to her lips.

'Who dared send me that shabby thing?" she said to her dresser, and then picked it up, from sheer curiosity to see the name of the man who had ventured to offer it. She dropped it, and uttered a cry of surprise and pleasure, then picked it up again and kissed it passionately. The label read: "To my daughter. Come home. I am angry no more." Truly it was the happiest day of her life—a triumph and reconciliation.

She left for Scotland that night. How slowly the train crawled on through the darkness! She could not sleep, and she watched the lighted towns go by one by one until the dawn.

She drew near her home, and the scenery became more familiar. Every spot she passed was bright with memories of child-hood. The train slowed down and stopped. She got out, left her luggage at the station, and walked towards her home.

In ten minutes she had reached the house. It looked more cold and grey than ever after the brilliancy of London. She hammered at the door, waited for a minute or two, and then struck it again. Presently faint shuffling foot steps sounded in the hall, the door opened slowly, and Jeannie, the old servant confronted her. She threw herself on the old woman's neck and kissed her withered cheeks.

"My father," she cried, "is he well? Oh, I am so happy, Jeannie." And she tried to pass her, but the old woman stood in the way, the tears rolling down her face.

The girl shivered in her rich sables and Jeannie, Jeannie, what is it? Let me by," she cried, and pushing her aside, she rushed into the dark dining-room, where her father was wont to sit. The oaken chair was empty, but the Bible lay on the table-open at the book of Ruth. One passage was marked with a blue pencil.

It was the verse beginning: "Entreat me not to leave thee." The blue pencil had dropped to the floor.

Jeannie had followed her into the room with tottering steps. "Where is my father, Jeannie, does he not expect me?"

"Come awa"; he is not here." "Not here?"

"He is not here, I tell ye," shrieked the old woman. "Come awa'," and clutching holt of the girl, she tried to drag her from

Ruth shook off her feeble hold and turned upon her like a tigress. "Where is he? What have you done to him?" she

The old woman moaned to herself, then crawled to the w dow. There was a distant view of the irkvard on the side of the purple hill. The setting sun fell on the hite stones and they glittered like stars. She pointed her skinny fingers in silence and then croaked: "Yonder, yonder, yon-

The girl looked out, straining her eyes to see the beloved form. When the white stones flashed upon her sight, the awful truth began to dawn upon her.

"Yonder," she muttered, almost uncon-sciously. Then she broke into a wild laugh, and flung herself into a chair. She read the marked passage, and laughed again, still more wildly.

"So I killed him, Jeannie, I killed him, and he—how much did he pay you, Jeannie, to do this thing? All his wealth? It is well. It was not too much for a deed like this."

"Stay, Missie stay," she whined out, putting her fingers to her ears to shut out the terrible voice. "Ye shall have it all. I am auld, and the money-I couldna' help **Keep it; it is accursed. I would not stouch it if I were starving. But the cross. woman, the cross of lilies?"

"It was his orders," she whimpered.

"It was—Oh, the puir bairn, the puir bairn, the puir bairn."

"It was which are the puir bairn."

"It was what?" the girl said, hoarsely, trising from the chair and gripping the old woman by the arm. "Speak, you old hag,

CITIZEN'S ADVICE.

Did ever the old adage "Think twice and act once" appear as much to the point? Can it be driven home more effectively? The majority of our readers have seen the opinions of and experience with Doan's Kidney Pills expressed in our Bellefonte papers by Mr. Geo. Gross of Water street. Over two years from the date the opinions first appeared in the Bellefonte newspapers he was again interviewed and gave the following for publication:

"In the summer of 1896 I used Doan's Kidney Pills for backache, procuring them from the Bush block drug store. Accompanying the pains in my back was an annoyance from the kidney secretions. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me after I had been troubled for years. I thought I was never going to have backache again, but two years afterwards I went fishing, got soaked through and this ended in affecting my back I again resorted to my old cure, Doan's Kidney Pills and they did me good immediately, although in the meantime I had taken other remedies but without obtaining relief, I, can as conscientiously recommend Doan's Kidney Pills now as I did formerly for back or kidney trouble."

For sale by all dealers. Price 50 cents. Foster-Milburn Co. Buffalo, N. Y., sold agents for the U. S. Remember the name Doan's and take no substitute.
