LUCILE.

She took the town by storm. There had never been such an excitement in the staid old village of Williamsburg within the memory of the oldest inhabi-

Miss Blanchard and her brother, Hart-Miss Blanchard and her brother, Hartley, came to Williamsburg for the benefit of Hartley's health, which was feeble.
They took rooms at the Jefferson house and remained there a couple of weeks, at the end of which time, liking the vicinity so well, they leased Egerton cottage for a year and removed thither. The Egertons had gone to Europe and left their house, all furnished as it was behind them, but all furnished, as it was, behind them, but Mr. Starling, the agent, had refused to let it until the Blanchards came and captivated him along with the rest of the towns-

The Williamsburgers were delighted with this charming acquisition to their society, and really, after Lucile had brightened a half dozen of their parties and social gatherings with her presence, it became a problem how the place ever became a locable without her

Nature turns out about one such woman in the course of a century, by way of showing what she can do, and after that rests from her efforts and gives us women with pug noses and wide mouths and watery eyes, and having seen so little perfection, we get used to the sham and learn to think it quite tolerable.

Every thread of Lucile Blanchard's hair was a prismed sunbeam, and when one saw it on her head, undulating, glittering curling over her fair brow and down her peerless shoulders, he said to himself that no painter's brush could ever picture and shadowed with lashes as dark as those which veil the flashing eyes of brunette beauties in Southern Spain. Her complexion was perfect. No rouge or pearl powder combination could ever hope to rival it, and her sweet lips were scarlet red, ripe as the wild meadow strawberry. She sang with rare sweetness and power, but she never played—a piano was too common a thing for a woman of her rare perfection that they also display the greatest respect for their parents and elders, who are thus more than repaid for the unfailing love and attention they bestow upon the little ones of the "Sunrise Kingdom."

Her brother was a pale, grave-faced man some years her senior, I suppose, though no one could not guess her age. She might have been eighteen or forty, and such a woman never grows old and is as lovely in middle age as in first youth and decidedly more dangerous.

There was a fine frost of reserve about her birth. her pure and clear as sunlight, but imard within a magic circle which no one had the boldness to cross.

Of all those who were ready to cast themselves under her chariot wheel, Lester Hathaway was most in earnest. This young man's infatuation was something fearful to witness, for it took the form almost of madness. He had been engaged to Annette Morse, a pretty village beauty, previous to the advent of Miss Blanchard, but after he had felt the charm of Lucile's presence he forgot Annette's existence.

He belonged to a proud family, the oldest and most respectably connected of any in the country. Hathaway hall, the family residence, was one of the finest places in the State, and the wealth and taste which had been lavished upon it and its furnishings would have built up a little village of tenement houses.

No member of the Hathaway family, ever so remotely connected, had ever committed a crying sin or made a misalliance, and Judge Hathaway. Lester's father, was very pompous in declaring that when his son married is must be to a lady formed that it was the ordinary kind made whose birth and breeding were equal to it reached the Judge's ear at last that Lester had fallen in love with the beautiful newcomer, and it gave his aristocrat c stomach such a turn that he did not taste a mouthful of dinner or touch the bottle of old port beside his plate.

He waited his son's coming in all the dignity and state of his wrath and read a long lecture on the desperate wickedness of his conduct.

"But father," said Lester, when the old man stopped to breathe, for he was a little asthamatic and this long speech acted unfavorably on his wind," you have not seen Miss Blanchard, and, of course, are not capable of judging of her merits. She is lovely as an angel, and I know you would admire her if you should see her?" would admire her if you should see her."

Lester flung himself out of the room in a pet, and the Judge ordered his horse and went to take an afternoon drive.

Call it fate or whatever you please, just as the Judge was passing Egerton cottage out rushed a big dog and frightened his horse so that the Judge was thrown, but sustained no injury beyond a few bruises

But the fair mistress of the cottage came flying to his side and carried him into the house, leaning on her arm, and stood over him with cologne and rosewater and was so sorry that the dreadful thing had hap-

But Miss Blanchard's conduct was admirable, so all the old ladies said. No one could possibly find any fault with it. She was gentle and courteous to all, but familiar with none. Among her adorers there was not one who would have dared to press her hand or touch a stray curl of her bright hair with caressing fingers.

Lester started back with an oath too strong to chronicle and burst out of the bouse. The next morning he left town and did not return for five years. When he did so, he found Mrs. Lucile the motherate of twins and the Judge pompous and happy, though a little mortified by the fact that his wife had been the daughter of a washerwoman. Antique Rugs Are Rare.

High Prices Paid for the Old-time Weaves

One of the most experienced men in the rug business recently made the assertion that there are not more than a few hundred genuine antique rugs in the country, says the Scotchman. Those who own them hold on to them, for their value inoreases every day. To be antique a rug must be at least 100 years old. Because it looks dingy and is high-priced is by no means a guarantee that the rug is a genuine antique, and many who have prided themselves on the ownership of such an article would be sadly disappointed if they in this country and had been "doctored" as long as they live.

The colors of these rugs never fade While the dust may soften their original tints the primal quality is never lost. They can be cleaned time and again without injury to color or texture. The people of India are excellent at copying and will reproduce an original rug so perfectly that it is hard to tell the difference. They always get the best ef-

Will Change the Course.

Mr. Hartly Blauchard was married to change the course of this road from Selinsof Middle creek, crossing over the creek and running on the west side of the creek to Kreamer, where they connect with the old road. With this route they do away with the heavy grade between Selinsgrove and Clifford, which requires so much motive power to move a train from Selinsgrove to that point. The heavy traffic over the road is bringing about a number of changes in the road bed of the division.

Mr. George Gross, of Water street, says: "In the summer of 1896 I used Doan's Kidney Pills for backache, procuring them from the Bush block drug store. Accompanying the pains in my back was an annoyance from the kidney secretions. Doan's Kidney Pills cured me after I had been troubled for years. I thought I was going to have backache again, but two years afterwards I went fishing, got soaked through and this ended in affecting my back, I again resorted to my old cure, Doan's Kidney Pills and they did me good immediately, although in the meantime I had taken other remedies but without obtaining relief.
