Because the girl you learned to love fool o' you?

You're wrestlin' with the dumps, I see, an' like as not you've cried-Of course you wouldn't own to thatthought o' suicide!

My boy, I used to see Blll Jones a-bettin' Day after day; the hoss he picked each time i

Er maybe third, till Bill at last would say, with

'I'll quit a backin' favorites an' play the field

"Some silly sort o' sentiment had prompted him to bet

A lot o' good hard dollars that he hasn't won back yet. He'd pick a hoss whose beauty had jes' som how turned his head, An' bet the opposition t' a standstill, said. He'd back the steed for something that he knowed he couldn't do, A-goin' 'gainst all precedent an' better jedgment, too;

An' then he'd up an, say; 'I guess it's time to change my style ; I'll quit a-backin' favorites an' play the field

"An' say, my boy! Bill Jones one time to me this thought revealed, 'There's lots more chance o' winnin' if a feller plays the field.' An' affection's much like racin' when fer beauty you would choose;

The man who backs a favorite is mighty apt to His jedgment's warped by roguish eyes, red cheeks, an' pretty hair. He stakes his all on winnin' an'

An' so, I wouldn't suicide ; I'd live an' change my style-I'd quit a-backin' favorites an' play the field awhile!"

THE BREACH MENDER.

Bobbie Grant, road commissioner of Platte township—several years before he made the race for the Legislature, Nebraska -was out one July morning before sun-rise putting half a dozen new planks in the flooring of Long Bridge. As he whistled and hammered, thinking what a gloriously comfortable beginning was allotted a most uncomfortable hot day and wondering how he could manage to take a solid fusion dele gation to the State convention, he caught the sound of hoof-beats on a distant span of the bridge. The commissioner paused, hammer up-lifted.

"Who in Sam Hill," says he, "can it be gallopin' over the bridge at sun-up like a duke in a piece of poetry? Walk your horses over the bridge,' said the commissioner with a fine show of offended authority to a 20-penny nail he was driving. Then, pricking up his ears again, "Why, damme, it's a pair." He then stood up and craned his neck for a glimpse of the riders, but the trees on the intervening islands out off the view. Straightening and breathing deep of the tonic air, he glanced up and down the river along and over the een labyrinth of islands, to the corncovered ridges against the eastern sky-line. "A fine mornin' for a ride-but I'll find 'em." The approaching hoof-beats were twice silenced on the sands of the intervening islands, and when they sounded again

Grant looked and saw the riders entering upon his span of the bridge.

"How now? By Billy—yes sir, sure's taxes, a woman. So! They see me now—that's right, whoa, but you're too late." Bobbie went on nailing and wondered what his lively couple would say, first, to a $5 fine each, and second, to a half hour's wait while he got the torn up planks replaced. The riders reined in upon discovering the commissioner and drew their mounts side by side. On still nearer view they appeared to be talking in low voices, and the interested Bobbie could make out that the man seemed to be reassuring his companion, having reached and taken pos-session of her whip hand. This tender conjunction was dissolved, however, upon close approach to the busy commissioner, who opened his eyes in surprise as he recognized the young fellow. He had been in his mind that same minute. "Here he is now,' said he to himself; "think about the -grasshopper and you hear the rustle of his wings. But I say if Dave and his gal's in a hurry I can fix up that little split in the party right here this morning." H Why, hello, Bob! What the dickens-have we got to wait?" "Onless you can jump it, Dave," replied Bobbie, with the convincing satisfaction of the cool observer in the presence of the flurried. He looked from young Dave Mor-ton to the girl at his side. "One o' the Bracken gals, ain't you?" said he. The girl blushed and hesitated. "Thought so," said the commissioner.

"Can't we get across, Mr. Grant?" asked the girl, finding her courage.

Bobbie looked up at her, down again to gap in the bridge floor. He said nothing the and began to whistle. In ordinary circumstances Bob's answer to a question was as quick and emphatic as the answer of gui cap to trigger. The young couple noted this with a foreboding trouble; such deliberation on Bobbie's part meant scheming of some sort. The horses champed their bits and stamped on the bridge impatient-

"Y'in a hurry. to get to town?" asked

Bobbie significantly, jerking his long whiskers in the direction of Platteville. Dave was young and thought best to steer round so inclusive a question.

"Oh, we're just taking a morning ride and want to get over before the sun comes up hot. Can't you lay 'em temp'rar'ly and let us over?" inquired the young gallant with ill-feigned calmness. lant with ill-feigned calmness.

Bob's answer was another question on quite a different subject. Back of his par-ticipation in the dialogue, his simple mind had been busy with the affairs of the great political party of which he was a devo member. The young man now before him was the leader of a small but dangerous conservative faction in Vista county. faction had made trouble in the past and were supposed to be concocting trouble for the county convention near at hand. If Vista's delegation to the State convention, to be chosen by this county convention, should be divide, it would mean danger to every plan and principle and candidate of at the convention next month? Slavin, o your township, was in Saturday, and he talked as rambunxious as ever. Now I—" "Christopher Moses, Bob! I've got no time to talk politics this morning. Can't you see?"

"Dave, you're wastin' your own valuable time. Now just you let me manage this confab, and you and your lady'll be on the move in a minute, Provided." "Oh, hash your 'provided,' Bob, let us

The lanky Populist raised his eyebrow and set another nail for driving. The girl turned in the direction they had come. The sun was lifting above the ridges, and through a gap where the road began its long winding descent to the river a third rider came into view. The girl uttered a little suppressed scream. "Father!" she gasped. "For God's sake, Bob!" cried young

"Keep cool, my children, he's two mile away yet. Keep ca'm and trust to Bobbie Grant. Now, look here, you Dave, you're too darned good a fellow to be left kickin' against the counsels of the party. If you weren't such a bright pop'lar chap, you couldn't do us any harm, but as she stands, my boy, if I help you now, you've got to help me later, do you see?" Dave was desperate. "Well, anything, only hurry."
"There's no hurry. But what I was gettin' at was just this; you carry the votes

o' three townships in your overalls' pock-Bob began laying the boards loose the repair gap. "Now I want you over the repair gap. "Now I want you fellows to behave when you come down here to this convention. 'Taint for my good, you can see that—it's for the party's

"Well, choke that stump speech. Bob, I can hear the old man on the far end of the bridge. He'll be up with us in half a giffy Hurry up and get that last board laid."

"Now, Dave, don't get excited, and remember, this old bridge—built by our old party, by the bye-is a clean mile long. And ther's just one other little matter. I'll have to fine you two for breaking through the regulation about walking your horse over the bridge. Dave protested.

"I've got to do it, my boy. When Bob-bie Grant is Road Commissioner the regulations have got to be enforced, do see? But you can pay the fine—ten dol-lars—when you get back from the honeymoon-you'll need what you've got about you, Dave, for the preacher, I guess. Do you see?

Young Morton groaned. "Fraid you've killed that part of it, Bob," said he sullenly. "The old man's got us now, for certain."

"Never you worry about the old man This bridge ain't fixed yet. I'll let him wait exactly one hour by the sun, and if you two ain't hitched by that time, you don't deserve to be, that's all."

"Oh, you beautiful man !" cried the young woman, beaming down upon Bob's rough face. "And if you will just con-vince him that it's all right, and that Dave is just the man for me you'll be simply ar

Bobbie cast his eye deliberately along the bridge, and adjusted the last board. "Clippit now!" he commanded, stepping to one side.

The riders were past him before the words were out of his mouth, and the same instant a white prairie orchid, tossed from somewhere, lodged in the folds of his crossed arms. In Nebraska the wild orchid is the bride's flower in its season. He took up the blossom and placed the stem between his lips, beginning to whistle 'Cot-ton Eyed Joe,' and watched the runaways until they left the bridge at the townward end and disappeared around the bend behind a grove of cottonwoods. Then he heard hoof-beats behind him. Without ooking in that direction, he stooped and began taking up the loose boards, at the same time changing his tune to "Hold the Fort For I am Coming."—By George Beardsley, Daily Story Publishing Company.

Hail to the Oyster.

The dealers along the wharves are enthu-

The dealers along the wharves are enthusiastic about the prospects for the new season of the oyster which has opened.

On September first, the Absecon, Cape May and Cape Shore beds are abandoned, and the product of the Maurice River Cover appears. The latter is the Delaware Bay overter which is taken from this heady. oyster, which is taken from this body of water, transplanted to the brackish water of Maurice River, and then laid out to fatten. The first arrivals, those which the dealer terms "samples," have given rise to the optimistic prophecies concerning the winter trade. They are in quality more superior to the oyster we have received for many years past. This good fortune is not confined to the Maurice River Cove; the oysters from all parts of Delaware Bay, in-cluding the Western Shore, boasting of the same exceptional quality.

For three months, September, October and November, the epicure feasts on the Delaware Bay product. By a happy provision of nature, at the end of November, the cove oysters begin to show a decline in quality, while the Chesapeake product is fast approaching its greatest perfection in readiness to supplant the Delaware oyster, the beds of which remains untouched after December first. The tributaries of the Chesapeake—the York, Rappahannock and James rivers, are utilized for the transplanting of the oysters of Chesapeake Bay. At the mouths of these rivers the oysters are laid on floats to fatten, and it is this variety that holds goods until spring when the summer oyster appears.

A dealer at the wharf who is familiar with the various kinds of oysters, says that he can tell, at a glance, from the shape and color of the shell, into which river they have been transplanted. A very fine variety of salt oyster, which comes about the same time as the Chesapeake Bay, is a product of Chincoteague Bay, Virginia, which accounts probably for the fact that numerous oyster dealers along the wharf claim this locality as their native place.

Fell 80 Feet and Lives Summer Girl Tumbles Down a Gorge in the Miss Caroline Schroeder, of Brooklyn, who is summering at Laurel House, Cats kill mountains, was precipitated 80 feet in to the gorge of the Kaaterskill Falls, Wednesday afternoon, but was rescued almost unburt. She fell among a dense growth of balsam and sustained only a few bruises.

The rains of the past few days have swollen the torrent which forms the famous Kaaterskill Falls. The water plung-es over a precipice 280 feet in height, and on one side of the gorge is a shelf-rock jut-ting out 80 feet below the summit. Miss Schroeder ventured too near the edge of the gorge, lost her balance and fell. Her unconscious body was raised by the People's party all the way up the line in county, State and nation.

"Dave," said Bobbie, cautiously, but looking squarely up in Dave's eyes, "what are you over-the-river fellows goin' to do suffered no serious injury.

Her unconscious body was raised by a rope to the top of the cliff. A physician the hand of the other man was advanced, but before their fingers touched there came badly bruised by the fall, but that she had suffered no serious injury.

McKINLEY SHOT PRESIDENT

While Holding a Public Reception at the Exposition in Buffalo -Second Shot Went Through the Stomach and Lodged Back of It--Anarchist's Crime--Prisoner Gave Two Names--Said He Had Done His Duty--Hid Revolver in Handkerchief, Fired as the President Reached Out to Shake His Hand--Mrs. McKinley's

The President staggered back, a shriek President McKinley, while holding a went up from the great crowd.
"The President's shot!"

public reception in the Temple of Music at the Pan-American exposition in Buffalo on ten, fifteen, twenty blue clad soldiers Friday afternoon at 4 o'clock, was shot sprang forward. twice by Leon Czolgosz a Polish anarchist. The first bullet struck him on the upper breast bone, glaucing and not penetrating and was removed within five minutes after the physicians reached the President. The second bullet penetrated the stomach and were plunging forward, rage crazed shoutremains embedded in his back. The President was removed immediately to the Emergency hospital on the grounds and at 6 o'clock Drs. Matthew D. Mann, Dr. John Parmenter and Dr. John Herman Mynter opened up the abdomen and probed for the second bullet. It was not found, however, and it was deemed best to close up the incision and wait until the President showed some indications of recovery. He was under the influence of anaesthetic for over an hour and was shortly afterwards removed to the Milburn home on Delaware Avenue, where he and Mrs. McKinley were guests.

The attempted assassination created intense excitement and it is very likely that the would-be murder would have been killed on the spot if President McKinley had not requested "Let no one hurt him." After his speech of Thursday and his visit to the fire works at the exposition Thursday night, the Fresident and Mrs. McKinley went to President Milburn's house, tired out. They arose early Friday, and at 9:20 o'clock were at Niagara Falls, going at once to Lewiston, where the party arrived at 9:50 o'clock.

There was a crowd of excursionists at the dock waiting to take the Toronto boat, but the President's coming had evidently not been noised about, and he and his escort attracted no extraordinary attention.

At Lewiston the party boarded four special trolley cars of the Gorge Route, and were whisked up along the river bank to Niagara Falls without making a stop. Alighting at Main and Second streets, twenty five carriages were waiting to take the President and party on a short tour of the city. Major Butler, of Niagara Falls; General S. M. Welch and Captains Pagan, Chapin and White, of the Sixty-fifth Regiment, acted as escort. The President was driven to the steel arch bridge and then back to the International hotel, where Mrs. McKinley alighted to take a rest until the rest of the party returned for luncheon The party were then driven through Proset Park. ing to the International hotel, where a cold luncheon was served. After luncheon the power house was visited. From there the party returned to the Pan-American Exposition grounds. PARTY AT EXPOSITION GROUNDS. The exposition grounds were reached at 3 o'clock and the party went at once to the Temple of Music. Mrs. McKinley, feeling fatigued, went to the Milburn home where they were stopping. The reception of the President was one to which the general public had been invited. President John G. Milburn, of the Exposition had introduced the President to the great crowd in the Temple and men, women and children came forward for a personal greeting.

This was the first distinctively public function at which the President appeared, except his address to 50'000 people on the Esplanade on Thursday. A large crowd awaited him. The people were banked in on the Esplanade around to the entrance of the Temple of Music. They made way for his carriers and as his carriage, and as it approached cheered The President walked into the main entrance holding the arm of President Milburn, of the Pan-American Exposition The usual company of distinguished guests

The Temple of Music was empty as he entered and took his stand to the right of the main aisle under the east gallery of the auditorium. He stood facing the south with President Milburn and the company of distinguished men. The only member of the Cabinet at his side was Secretary of Agriculture, James Wilson, who had accompanied him to the Falls.

The crowd was admitted as soon as the President had taken his stand, and walked in regular line from the main door of the building. A half dozen detectives stood around the President narrowly watching the approach of the people.

For more than balfan hour the line pass ed slowly, each one in it receiving a hearty handshake and a pleasant word as they

The assassin in this line easily passed the strict scrutiny of the Secret Service men. strict scrutiny of the Secret Service men.
There was nothing in his appearance to indicate his purpose. Well dressed, well appearing, he silently bided his time.

Not a muscle or an eyelash quivered as step by step he neared the unconscious object of his blood-lust. One hand wrapped in a large white headbackhist he carried on in a large white handkerchief he carried as if it were injured.

Underneath, deftly concealed, he held a short, self action 32 calibre revolver, his finger on the trigger.

As the murmured words, denoting the President's place grew louder, he straight-ened up, but still displayed no sign of Had he made one suspicious sign there were men in watching who would have detected it, and his place in the line would have been vacant. The woman ahead of him grasped the President's hand. With expertness born of experience the motion that took her hand moved her along, and the murderer and his victim were face to face. GREETS ASSASSIN WITH SMILE. With a smile the President's right hand was quickly extended, his lips parted to utter the conventional words of greeting. The hand of the other man was advanced, Condition-The Assassin's Confession.

In an instant there was an uproar. Five

The President fell into the arms of secret service inspector Ireland, who was just back of him, and President Milburn, Secretary Cortelyou and half a dozen exposition officials assisted him to a chair. His face was very white but he made no outery and he was the coolest man in all the multitude. In the hall women were fainting and screaming in hysterics, a thousand men

"Lynch him, the assassin! Lynch him Tear him to pieces!'

HIS FIRST THOUGHT FOR HIS WIFE. He looked up into President Milburn's face and gasped "Cortelyou." The President's secretary bent over him.
"Cortelyou," said the President, "my wife. Be careful about her. Don't let her lie.

know. Moved by pain he writhed to the left, and then his eyes fell on the prostrate form of his would be murderer. Czolgosz lay on the floor, helpless beneath the blows of the guard. The President raised his right hand and placed it on the shoulder of his secretary. "Let no one hart him?" hereigness that the condition of the President required immediate removal. "Let no one hurt him," he said, and then sank back in the chair while the guards carried him, Czolgosz, away.

A farmer from Grand Valley, Pa., F. J.

Haehn, who had come with his wife and daughter to see the President, took off his hat and fanned Mr. McKinley as he sat in the chair. When the President saw the surgeons and the stretcher which was brought immediately from the hospital on the ground, he arose and stoutly took a few steps, which brought him to the side of the stretcher. He paused a moment, leaning forward, and then laid down, as if it were his couch. Surrounded by officials, surgeons and police, the President was taken at once to the Emergency hospital on the Fair grounds. He was entirely conscious and gave little indication of the pain he was suffering.

"How are you feeling, Mr. President?"

said Mr. Milburn, with tears in his eves. "Oh, I am all right," was the cheerful answer. "I am sorry," he said, "to have been the cause of trouble to the Exposi-

Three thoughts had found expression with the President-first, that the news should be kept from his wife; second, that the assassin should not be harmed and third, regret that the tragedy might hart the exposition.

TWO BULLETS STRIKE HIM.

After Czolgosz fired the shot. Big Jim Parker, a negro waiter, who stood behind him in the line, threw his arm around Czolgosz's neck and bore him to the floor. Parker is a man nearly six feet tall, and strong and plucky. Czolgosz tried to resist, but he was quickly overpowered, and he was given a good beating before he flopped down on the floor and gave up the

He was taken to the ante-room and be gan to play the "insanity dodge" immediately. For half an hour he sat on a table with closed eyes and did not mutter a word. Later he was escorted out of the building by a strong force of police, with 20,000 people shouting and yelling and striving to get near the carriage in which he rode with the officers. The carriage was halted by the angry crowd several times, but by strenuous work the police got him out of the grounds and down Delaware avenue to the city police headquarters.

AN OPERATION PERFORMED. At the hospital where the regular corps of surgeons had been re-enforced by Drs. Mynler, Mann, Van Peyma, of Buffalo, and a Dr. Lee, of St. Louis, a superficial diagnosis was at once made.

The course of the first bullet was quickly traced. It struck the breastbone and plowed into the breast with glancing force, inflicting a flesh wound only. It was at once removed.

The second bullet entered just below the navel, penetrating the walls of the abdomen, carrying away a portion of one intestine and lodging in the tissues back of the tomach.

The walls of the abdomen were opened but the bullet was not found. The wound was closed, and after this preliminary search a hasty conference resulted in the decision that the President should be removed to the home of President Milburn, where a further search might be made. MRS. MCKINLEY INFORMED .

Immediately the President was cared for at the exposition grounds, Director General W. I. Buchanan started for Milburn residence to forstall any information that might reach there by telephone or otherwise. Very luckily he was first to arrive with the information. The Niagara Falls trip had tired Mrs. McKinley and on returning to the Milburn residence she took leave of her nieces, the Misses Bar-ber, and the President's niece, Miss Dun-can, as well as their hostess, Mrs. Milburn, and went to her room to rest.

Mr. Buchanan broke the news as gentl as possible to the nieces and consulted with them and Mrs. Milburn as to the best course to pursue in breaking the news to Mrs. McKinley. It was finally decided that on her awakening, or shortly thereafter, Mr. Buchanan should break the news to her, if in the meantime her physician, Dr. Rixey, had not arrived.

Mrs. McKinley awoke from her sleep at bout 5:30 o'clock. She was feeling splendidly, she said, and at once took up her crocheting. which, as is well known, is one of her favorite diversions. Immediately on Mr, Buchanan's arrival at the Milburn home he had the telephonic communica-tion cut off, as already there had been sev-eral calls, and he decided on this as the visest course to pursue, lest Mrs. McKinley, hearing the continued ringing of the 'phone bell might inquire what was meant. While the light of day remained Mrs. Mc-Kinley continued with her crocheting, keeping to her room. When it became dusk and the President had not arrived, she began to feel anxious concerning him. "I wonder why he does not come," she asked one of her nieces.

At 7 o'clock Dr. Rixey arrived at the Milburn residence. He had been driven hurriedly down Delaware avenue in an open carriage. As he came up Mr. had been in hard luck, and he had no mon-

Buchanan was out on the lawn conversing with a reporter. After Dr. Rixey had gone Director General Buchanan said that the doctor had broken the news in a most gentle manner to Mrs. McKinley. He said she stood it bravely though considerably affected. If it was possible to bring him to her she wanted it done. Dr. Rixey assured her that the President could be brought with safety from the exposition grounds, and when he left Mr. Milburn's it was to complete all arrangements for the removal of the President.

MOVED FROM FAIR GROUNDS.

When the city of light was shrouded in darkness at the usual hour for the illumination the President was removed from the grounds. He was still under the influence of an anaesthetic, which had been administered to enable the surgeons of the Exposition hospital to find the bullet, which has penetrated the walls of his abdomen.

Colonel Michael of the government board, had just telegraphed to Secretary Hay, at his home in New Hampshire, that Surgeon Rixey, the personal attendant of President McKinley, would issue in a few lines an official bulletin announcing the President's condition.

The President's condition, as gathered from the tone of Colonel Michael statement, was that it was most serious. In formation from the hospital confirmed it. Chances of the President's recovery were about even.

When it was decided to remove the Pres ident from the hospital a cot and hedding were hastily loaded into an automobile and sent, with doctors, nurses and attendants, to make ready in President Milburn's home a bed in which the President should

Thousands of anxious visitors to the exposition stood in a wide semicircle before the hospital door and watched with droop-

The automobile gave place to the ambulance, and a little later the President was carried out on a stretcher. Then slowly, with bared heads, between a long lane of hatless visitors, the ambulance surgeons bore their precious freight up the hall through the Esplanade, between the Pylons and over the Bridge of Triumph and out through the Lincoln Park gate and down the grand avenue which leads to the home of President Milburn.

It was a sad and silent crowd which gazed at the black side of the ambulance still more blackened by the unwonted darkness, for not a lamp shone in the city of lights. Only the lamp in the ambulance marked the course of the surgeons and their precious burden. Behind he ambulance came two automobiles loaded with surgeons and nurses. Platoons of police, well mounted, es-ey on his person when searched by the de-

He came to Buffalo from Cleveland last Saturday with his heart full of his purpose—to shoot the President. He had no other errand and found shelter in Polish saloon at 105 Broadway, in the Polish dis-

He had been loitering about the routes marked out in the press for the President's tour during the last three days. He was seen at some of the buildings on Thursday by the guard on that day, but no was not well-known to the detectives could get near the President. He had his first opportunity Friday when the President appeared for the public reception in the Temple of Music.

BULLETINS OF THE PHYSICIANS. The following bulletin was issued by the physicians at 7 p. m. Friday evening.
"The President was shot about 4 o'clock, one bullet struck him on the upper portion of the breast bone, glancing and not penetrating; the second bullet penetrated the abdomen five inches below the left nipple and one half inches to the left of the medium line. The abdomen was opened through the line of the bullet wound. It was found that the bullet had penetrated the stomach. "The opening in the front wall of the stomach was carefully closed with silk stitches, after which a search was made for a hole in the back wall of the stomach. This was found and also closed in the same way. The further course of the bullet could not be discovored, although careful search was made. The abdominal wound was closed without drainage. No injury to the intestines or other abdominal organs was discovered.

The patient stood the operation well, pulse of good quality, rate of 130; condition at the conclusion of operation was gratifying. The result cannot be foretold. His condition at present justifies hope of recovery.'

(Signed) GEORGE B. COTELYOU,

"Secretary to the President." The following bulletin was issued by the President's physicians at 10:30 p. m.

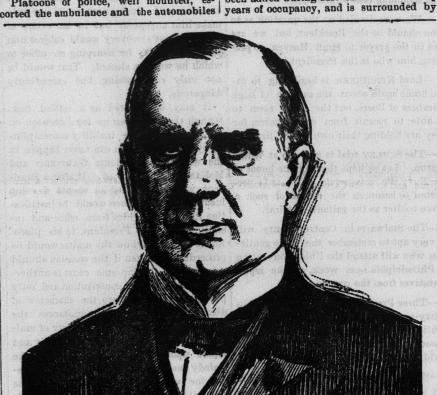

"The President is rallying and is resting comfortably; 10.50 p. m. Temperature, 100.4 degrees; respiration, 24. P.
M. Rixey, R. E. Parke, H. E. Minter, Eugene Warbin

gene Wanbin. [Signed] GEORGE B. CORTELYOU, The President's physicians issued the following bulletin at 1 a. m. The President is free from pain and resting well. Temperature 100.2, pulse 120; respiration 24.

WHERE THE PRESIDENT LIES.

The Milburn home stands on Delaware avenue, close to Ferry street. It is an old-fashioned homestead, with wings that have been added during Mr. Milburn's twenty out of the ground. They led it way down Lincoln Park way and through Chapin place into Delaware avenue and thence to President Milburn's home

PRESIDENT M'KINLEY.

AS TO THE ASSASSIN.

When the assassin was finally hauled from under the crowd of soldiers and citizens Corporal Bertschey had both hands clasped around his neck and was slowly choking him to death. His face was cut, and blood was streaming from his nose and mouth. But he appeared cool and un-

"Kill him !" shouted the crowd, surging forward. "Lynch him!" And there appeared a fair chance that this would

But a few sharp words of command by Captain Wiser, commanding them brought the soldiers to their senses, and a squad of police and detectives appeared as if by magic and surrounded him. His revolver, which had been wrenched from his hand by a soldier, was turned over to Captain Wiser, who still has it. With drawn revolvers the police forced their way through the crowd to a closed carriage. The crowd pressed close, cursing, shouting and threatening. Some of them had knives in their hands, others had picked up stones and sticks. But they were held in check by the drawn revolvers. On the way to the carriage a policeman asked him.

"I HAVE DONE MY DUTY."

"Why did you do this?"

"I'm an Anarchist," was the proud answer. "I have done my duty."

The carriage containing the prisoner shackled and held by the policeman and three detectives, was held by a perfect mob. Soldiers and policemen beat back the mob and fought a way through the surging mass of humanity for the carriage to escape. The horses were whipped to a run and the journey to the first police station was made as those in the street were catching the first breath of news from the Exposition grounds.

There he was quickly dragged before the sergeant and questioned. Czolgosz is a young man, 28 years old, single and a blacksmith. He is of medium build and height, has light, golden, fluffy hair and large blue eyes. His face is sharp, and he looks like an intelligent man, although his head is somewhat irregular in shape.

He wore a light summer suit of striped blue and gray, the stripe being narrow, black shoes and a common madras shirt, a well cared-for garden. The whole at-mosphere of the place is one of comfort and Immediately after the shooting on the Exposition grounds, it was agreed that the President should be taken there, if the doctors would permit his removal. Mrs. McKinley was already a guest at the house. Dr. Rixey, her personal physicion, went there to notify her that the President had been shot, and at the same time to make arrangements for the reception of the President. It was decided to place the President's bed in a room about 18 by 20 feet in the rear of the second floor of the house. This room was selected because it has two windows open to the west and two to the north, and is quieter than any other room in the house. All furniture was cleared from it and all draperies. Immediately in front of the room to which it was decided to bring the President is a room which the physicians are using for consultation, and in front of that facing on Delaware avenue, is Mrs. McKinley's room. The main entrance is to the southeast. As the distinguished vsitors arrive they are met in the hallway by Secretary Cortelyou or some of his staff, and led into the library, which opens to the right from the hallway. This library, with high walls covered with hangings in which great masses of roses predominates, has been transformed for the time into the executive office of the President. A big table and a desk in one corner, where a break in the endless line of book shelves permitted, has been taken possession of by Mr. Cortelyou. His stenographers work at a small table in the center of the big room and the click of the typewriter goes on un-

Beyond this library and still to the right is the red room. It is a sitting-room and opens on a porch facing Delaware avenue. Here the Cabinet met the physicians, persented the properties of the properties of the persented the properties of the p sonal friends of the President's and mem-bers of the Milburn household. No one goes upstairs, which is given over to the use of the sufferer and his nurses, women from the Emergency hospital staff.

The stable of the Milburn home has The stable of the Milburn home has been taken charge of by the guards who are now on constant picket duty about the place. General Brooke, commander of the department of the east, came immediately from New York and under his direction the ropes which were stretched near the Milburn home to keep teams and pedestrians from near the place, were extended in every direction thus insuring perfect quiet and safety. Two tents were erected on a lawn on the opposite side of the Ave-

(Concluded on page 6.)