Driven from France.

Great Religious Excaus of Order Priests Followed Enforcement of the Law of Associations.

The Law of Associations. by which all religious Orders not specially authorized by the government must leave France, be-came effective October 1st, when occurred the largest religious exodus since the time of the edict of Nantes.

As a result of the law, three-fourths of the religious Orders existing in France a month ago have already emigrated, in-cluding the Jesuits and the Assumptionists, against whom the law was specially directed. Some of the members of the Orders have entered private families as tutors rather than leave their country. The Jesuit schools have been placed in hands of Paris teachers. The government proposes to confiscate all the property of unauthorized Orders. The government has made an exception in the case of the Monks of the Grand Chartreuse, on account of the reuenue derived from their liquors. A few Orders have refused to go, waiting. to see how far the government dare proceed-The Trappists have applied for authoriza-tion, but declare if authorization is refused, they will barricade their monasteries and defend them at the cost of their lives, rather than yield to such iniquitous religious persecution. The Trappists have a monastery in Ken-

Many Orders have been quietly prepar-ing homes for themselves in other countries within the last month or two. The Benedictines from Havre and St. Malo, have already established themselves at Appuldurcombe, House, Isle of Wight, which they acquired a month ago, and which, strangely enough, was the site of a Benedictine monastry in the middle ages. The Bene-dictine Sisterhood has also migrated and is now established at Cowes

The fact is that last week there was a constant and extraordinary stream of relig-ious bodies from France, which the Paris newspapers have christened "L" Exode des Congregations."

France's church troubles were most ser ious during the Revolution that produced the first Republic, when the vast church estates were confiscated and given to the government. It was found impossible to restore the property, but under the first Napoleon an agreement was made under which some recompense was guaranteed by the payment of considerable sums of money to the prelate annually, and under this policy the Catholic Church recovered some of its lost financial and realty strength. Gradually the religious Orders gathered

Recently the clericals reported property worth $220,000. 000, and it was said that $500,000,000 would not purchase the estates of the various Orders. There are in France 3,220 re-ligious houses, and they have 2,784 schools and orphanages of the institutions yielding considerable profits. For some years past there have been some inquiries as to what the religious Orders want with all the wealth. their alms-giving being reported as
