AN URBAN MISERERE. It wasn't meant for folks to stay In town, all huddled up together When nature dons the bright array That blends with crisp November weather. It's more than flesh and blood can stand, It fills the soul with mad rebelling, That beauty glows throughout the land, And we in prison must be dwelling !

For sun and wind and earth and sky, They call to us their gladdest greeting, And all our being makes reply, And longs to join the merry meeting Oh, but the loss beyond recall ! The folly of it, and the pity The open world so fair in fall, And we cooped up in some big city ! -Ripley D. Saunders, in St. Louis Republic.

Li Hung Chang.

Close of One of the World's Most Interesting Careers

General Grant's oft quoted remark that the only three men he met in his trip around the world who impressed him as truly great were Bismarck, Gladstone and Li Hung Chang affords a clue to the estimation in which the greatest of China's statesmen was held.

Last year though he was 78 years old, his native country turned to him and he was summoned from his highly important post as viceroy of Canton to proceed to Pekin and consult with the empress dowager as to the best way of restoring unhappy China to the peace that once prevailed. He held, next to the throne, supreme power in China longer than any other man in the present century. In an extraordinary de-gree he impressed the force of his character upon the people of the west. Vigor in mind and body were combined in Li Hung Chang. He was six feet two inches tall, a height seldom reached by Chinamen, though in general they are by no means a small race. He wore a beard, one of the few things which the average Chinaman envies the Caucasian. Abstemious in his habits, he usually preserved good health through a long life filled with work that might have broken down many a ounger man.

A conservative when judged by western tandards, Li was vigorously progressive, according to the views of the Chinese. He was tolerant toward missionaries and an ar- SHOULD CONVINCE THE GREATEST SKEPdent believer in modern methods so long as they are compatible with the peculiar charoter of Chinese civilization. More than any other Chinamen he understood the spirit of the caucasian people. Li was born in South China of a good family. He studied indefatigably in youth and passed the civil service examination with credit. The Taeping rebellion, a great upheavel in China, which lasted from 1850 1864, first brought him into notable prominence. In the early sixties he had risen to be governor of the province of Kiang Su, in which Shanghai is situated, and it was there that the rebellion reached one of its most active phases. He was the directing authority in the movements which, with "Chinese" Gordon as the military leader, resulted in the final overthow of the Taepings. Without detracting in any way from the credit due to Gordon as a soldier and a man, it is fair to Li Hung Chang to say that his administrative genius contributed in marked degree to the final success of the imperial cause. He even took the field himself at one time and showed soldierly qualities of a high order.

In 1870 Li was pronounced to of Pechili, the metropolitan province of China. For twenty four years he remained in this position, becoming the guiding statesman of the realm and holding office in the grand secretaries of Pekin. It was a critical time for his country. Foreigners were pressing her on every side, demanding concessions and seeking to introduce radical innovations. Li yielded to them in many things adopting some of their ideas as an improvement, but guarding the venerated civilization of China from rude shock and upheaval. A maxim which he laid down was : "Let us use foreigners, but do not let foreigners use us."

He was quick to see the advantages of railroads and so far overcame the opposition to them at the palace that he was permitted to build some of them bimself. He established telegraph lines, opened and developed coal mines, founded academies for training military and naval officers, constructed arsenals and fortifications and bought modern warships. The intense conservatism of the Chinese system prevented him from reorganizing the army and navy as rapidly and successfully as Japan did, but he accomplished a great deal in that line.

The war with Japan broke his power temporarily. The palace at Pekin expected Li to win, though it had blocked some of his most practical plans for developing the empire's war forces. When Japan began to gain victories, he was rapidly strip-ped of his honors. His jacket of yellow, the royal color, which he had been permitted to wear as a great mark of distinction, was taken from him, as were also his peacock feathers and other decorations. Finally he was suspended in all of his offices id went into temporary retirement. When China at last saw that Japan had won, Li was called out again and sent to negotiate the treaty of peace. China in her crisis, could not do without him. Though wounded by a would be assassin at the outset of his negotiations, he recovered and acted as China's representative throughout the framing of the treaty, the crafty Marquis Ito representing Japan. These two intellects were a good match when pitted against each other, Li, by his diplomatic finesse, was enabled to get exceptionally good terms for his country, but the conces-sions he made offended Pekin's pride, and at the conclusion of the treaty he was again sent into retirement. Foreign representatives at Pekin persuaded the government to accept the treaty as the best arrangement that could be made under the circumstances.

Li remained in retirement until the coronation of the czar when he was sent to St. Petersburg as China's representative. He made a tour of the world, visiting the made a tour of the world, visiting the United States in 1896 and creating great interest in this country. Many of his wit-ty remarks were widely quoted. He had a great habit of asking questions and gain-ed vastly more information than he gave during his visit. during his visit.

(BENSON'S PLASTER IS PAIN'S MASTER.) For coughs and colds Benson's Porous

Plasters are an incomparably better reme dy than any other-external or internal Their medicinal properties enter the skin and go straight to the seat of the disease.

They relieve and cure a "seated" cold without disturbing the system or upset-ting the stomach. Cough mixtures often nauseate. Benson's Plasters are medicinal in the highest degree, and quickest to act.

Placed on the chest or back or on both at once in serious cases, the good effect is felt immediately. The congestion yields, the cough abates and the breathing improves.

Lung or bronchial affections or kidney disease, are cured with the least possible suffering and loss of time.

Benson's Plasters are immeasurably superior to Belladonna, Strengthening, Capsicum or any other combination in plaster form. They are also preferable to ointments, liniments and salves.

Benson's Plasters have received fiftyfive highest awards over all competitors ; and more than 5,000 physicians and druggists have declared them to be one of the few trustworthy household remedies. MPORTANT ADVICE.

It is surprising how many people wake up in the morning nearly as tired as when they went to bed, a disagreeable taste in their mouth, the lips sticky, and the breath offensive, with a coated tongue. These are nature's first warnings of Dyspepsia and Liver Disorders, but if the U.S. Army and Navy Tablets are resorted to at this stage they will restore the system to a healthy condition.
