found helpful in cases of constipation.

Potatoes are poison to some people, and until they are two years old. Then the potato should be thoroughly baked, beaten with a fork until light and seasoned with salt, cream, or a little heef or chicken juice. Melted butter is not digestible, and it is not wise to put butter on a hot potato to feed to a child

Children awake early. The little stomach is at once clamorous, and a bottle or oup of warm milk with a little bread, should be given. Two hours after this the child should be bathed, and then comes its breakfast, with milk, bread and a cereal for variety. At the mid-day dinner the egg, or meat juice, broth, etc., should be given with the stewed fruit. The meal in the middle of the afternoon should be light, milk, bread and a cereal, and just before going to bed the child should be given a last meal of milk.

It is of great importance that children adhere to the regular hours of meals. Eating hetween meals is a pernicious practice. Children should be taught to eat slowly and to masticate their food thoroughly. They should be given a sufficient variety of dainty, well cooked food, but not such a variety as will stimulate them to overeating.

AFTER THE THIRD YEAR.

After the third year is reached the diet is gradually increased, both in amount and variety. The meats should for some years be limited to beef, mutton, chicken or baked hen and turkey. Sausage, pork, hog meat of every king, should never be given to children, with the exception of breakfast bacon, a little of which is generally considered wholesome. Delicately made soups are always relished by children and are nourishing. Fresh vegetables, in their season, such as as paragus, peas, beans, onions, cooked until thoroughly tender and well chewed are good. Custards, rice puddings, bread puddings, sponge cake, gin gerbread and stewed fruits form excellent esserts for children.

It is wise to accustom a child to eat a variety of food, but this cannot be done by command or force. Tact and kindness are best. When a notional child refuses food which he has not tasted, it is of little use to try harsh measures, which will likely confirm him in a lasting detestation of the food in question; gentle measures are best. Let the table be a place for merry talk. Do not allow a child to be teased or punished while easting. It is most injurious.

A light heart promotes digestion.

Harry Hartman, of Findlay, Ohio, has come East to claim as a bride a young woman whom he has never seen. Hartman is a produce dealer in Rawson. Last September he wrote his name on an egg, which he packed and sent to a New York commission house. From there the crate was sent to Boston and then to Charlestown, Mass., where it fell into the hands of a grocer. The dozen in which this was contained was purchased by Miss Leora Barnhast, who keeps house for her father in a very respectable part of the city. She saw the name on the egg, and thereupon wrote a letter to its owner and an answer followed. A correspondence was begun in earnest, and the engagement was the result.-Cincinnati Commercial-Tribune.
