THE RISE OF A RELATIVE.

It was about 10 o'clock when Mrs. Hopkins hastened to her front door in response to a sharp knock.

"Why, Mis' Jones, how do you do? I'm proper glad to see you, now, I tell you," said she, cordially, to a diminutive woman on the doorstep. "I hain't seen any one on the doorstep. "I hain't seen any one from Spencerville for ages! Come right in and take off your things—course you'll stay for dinner." and she bustled about in anxious hospitality, while her guest obeyed her kindly commands.

"No, I hain't been over for quite a spell," acknowledged the new comer as she untied her bonnet strings. "You see my rheumatiz has been botherin' me a sight lately; but I was thinkin' yesterday when I heard our men-folks talkin' about your consin Lo, that-"

"Do you mean Lo Simpkins?" interrupted Mrs. Hopkins, with a disdainful sniff.

"Yes; and they said-" "Well, he's no cousin of mine, Maria Jones,—leastways, not close," interposed the woman again, in blissful disregard of any conversational rights that her visitor might be supposed to possess. "He's always claimed to be related, but it's way back ever so far—and only by marriage, at that. Such a good-for-nothin'! And what a wife he's got—slackest housekeeper I ever did see. She's one notch worse'n her husband. I don't take no stock in such folks, for my part!"

"Well, anyway" ventured Mrs. Jones, timidly, "I s'posed he was related to you. I've told folks so lots of times—but I won't again," humbly. "People seem to think a heap of him over there, though, and you know he's up for representative, and every-body says he'll get it, too, she finished, with a little tilt in her chin.

Susan Hopkins stopped short on her way to the kitchen, and turned around in the "Up for representative?" she asked sharp ly.

"Yes, he is," asserted the other with new courage. "And some of her folks have left 'em a lot of money, too, and they are buildin' a new house, all pillars and "You don't say !" exclaimed Susan Hopkins with a queer little drop to her lower jaw- "Well,"—and she sighed heavily. "Cousin Lo always was kinder lucky." Then she added, briskly, "Now, you'll have to excuse me a minute, for I've got to see to my pies. Make yourself right to home, -course you brought your work, -I'll be back soon," and she went out and shut the door with a short, crisp snap. When Abija Hopkins came in to supper that night, he found his wife sweeping dusting with reckless haste, while her face plainly showed that something unusual was on her mind. He had not long to wait.

"Bija, I want you to drive me over to girls back with me to stay a week or two, now, so you can hitch up the two seater." In the early morning the carriage rumbled down the long lane that led to the house, and swung around the corner on to the main road. On the back seat sat Mis. Hopkins wearing a look of placid contentment beneath her Sunday bonnet.

'Bija brought the horse to a sudden stop at the little cottage next the village church, and a huxom woman appeared at the door in cordial greeting. The occupant of the back seat looked down condescendingly.

"How do you do, Mis' Wiggings? No thank you, I ain't goin' to stop. I'm on my way to Spencerville to see my cousin, Mr. Simpkins. I just called to ask you and the parson to take dinner with us Thanksgiving.' I'm goin' to have the whole Simpkins family,—you know he's goin' to be representative, and I thought maybe your husband would enjoy meetin' such a noted man. That's all—we shall expect you!" and with a nod and a beaming smile. she told 'Bija to drive on:

Two hours later, they drew rein before a small cottage on the outskirts of Spencerville, and a thin-faced, tired-looking woman peered furtively out from the half-opened door. Mrs. Hopkins clambered down from her high seat, told 'Bija to return in an

"Well, Cousin Hetty, I thought 'twas time I come to see you. It seems ever so long since I set eyes on any of you? How's Lo and the girls?"

Hetty Simpkins allowed the door to swing wide open, and with a dazed expression on her pale face escorted her voluble visitor into the front door.

'You're real good, I'm sure," said she. the color coming into her cheeks as she nervously dusted a chair with her apron. "Come in and set down. I'm sorry things are littered 'round so' but you'll have to excuse it, -you see, the rooms bein' so small, they get cluttered up."

"Oh, that's all right! You needn't apologize—not a word. You won't mind it as long as you ain't goin' to stay here but a listle while longer, of course," plied M.s. Hopkins, as she rocked violently back and forth, and cast a comprehensive glance around the tiny room—a glance which encompassed every cheap detail. The little woman opposite looked up quickly, and wiped a unbidden tear from her eye.

"I know it," she said, woefully, "it's goin' to be sold next Friday. It makes me feel pretty bad, too, for I've got kinder fond of the old place."

Her visitor stared. That a woman could weep over the loss of a paltry cottage, yet having all the time the prospect of "pillars and piazzas," was beyond her comprehension. She abruptly changed the subject.

"I came on purpose to ask you all down to Thanksgivin', and I'd like to take the girls home with me now to stay a spell, if you can spare 'em."

The other's face brightened. "Thank you,—you'er real good, I'm sulted in the family of Joseph Neutzling, sure? They can go as well as not for all Superintendent of the Uniontown Glass that I know. I'm sure there's nothin' to Works. About seventy-five cases of the keep them here," said she, picking at a three diseases are reported.

think it's anythin' to joke about !" Her visitor stopped rocking. "Why, Hetty Simpkins—what's the matter? I was only in fun! Ain't you pleased? You don't seem to half appreciate bein' a representative's wife!"

A great light burst through the befogged vision of Hetty Simpkins. A mist gathered in her eyes. "I guess you've made a little mistake, Mrs. Hopkins. There's another man in town by the name of Lorenzo Simpkins, and he's runnin' for representative, I under stand. He is also havin' a new house built. This house is goin' to be sold next Friday to pay the mortgage,—"there was a little break in her voice, but she caught her breath and sternly forced herself to speak steadily. A Little About Thanksgiving.

however, in time to eat your Thanksgivin' turkey!" By Eleanor H. Porter in The

Do most of us, I wonder, ever stop to think of the origin of what is now a great national festival? Of late years Thanksgiving has become, with some of us, little more than an occasion for indulging in unlimited turkey and plum pudding, perhaps going to the matinee or a foot ball game or some other sort of junketing in the afternoon. We scarcely realize the deep solemnity of the first Thanksgiving day ever celebrated on this continent by our stern Puritan forebears from whom we inherit both our strenuous dispositions and our

The first Thanksgiving occurred in the Plymouth Colony soon after the landing of the Pilgrims, in 1621. The little harvest of the settlers had been successfully gotten in, the Indians were for the moment peaceful, and everything looked brighter and more promising to the little community than it had for a long time, so a day of thanksgiving to God for his great mercies ticket agents for full particulars or write for inthe colony four were singled out by the Pittsburg, Pa. Governor who sent them "fowling, that there might be wherewithal for a feast of rejoicing." The game they brought back with them was the wild turkey; hence the bird whose sovereignty on that day has for over two hundred years been undisputed.

It is believed by the best authorities that the first celebration took place in October, as it was out of doors and lasted nearly a week. Every twelve month or so other days of thanksgiving followed for about forty-seven years but at no one given time or season. Each congregation appointing the day that it deemed most convenient, sometimes it occurred in the spring after a hard winter, more often in the fall to return thanks for generous harvest. - McCall's Magazine.

Syracuse's Carrie Nation.

She Starts on a Crusade Against Saloons Which Keep Open on Sundays.

Syracuse has a second Carrie Nation in the person of Mrs. Lucy A. Collins, of 704 Beach street. She has started on a crusade against saloons which keep open on Sundays and has already caused the arrest of two saloon-keepers, John Gallagher and Nathan Oohen. Every Sunday Mrs. Collins goes on the war path. She enters saloons and tells the bar-tenders to "get out of the place." She entered Gallagher's place by the side door and found a number Spencerville tomorrow. I hain't seen Lo's wife for ever so long. I shall ask then all down Thanksgivin', and maybe bring the of men sitting in the rear room. These men were startled to see a good-looking middle-aged woman, with her arms full of tracts, appear and say in an excited manner; "I've got you now." Then she ran up to the bar-tender, who was washing some glassware, and attempted to stop him working. Then she rushed out to another

Of Interest to Townships.

The opinion just handed down by the superior court relative to indebtedness of a township in Luzerne county, which is to the effect that townships must pay their own debts, is of far reaching interest and should be weighed well. The suit grew out of a township in Luzerne county with 7,000 inhabitants having a debt of $64,000. The superior court directs that a special levy be made on the taxables, based on the valuations as revised by the county commissioners. The lesson, though a severe one, will teach property owners to pay more attention to the proper administration of township affairs.

Millionaire Given a Thrashing.

Peter Arlund, a wealthy steel manufacturer of New Orleans, soundly thrashed Col. Moses C. Witmore, millionaire and former tobacco magnate, in the Planters hotel in St. Louis last Wednesday. Arlund accused Witmore of having followed Mrs. Arlund to her room and insulted her Witmore refused to apologize and Arlund gave him a good beating.

Ten Dollars a Fish

Constable A. A. Baker, ex-officio game warden of Sullivan county, recently cap-tured two men who had fifty trout under six inches in length in their baskets and took them before 'Squire Buschhausen at Laporte. The men pleaded guilty and were fined $500 and costs. One man had twenty-four trout and the other twentysix, so the cost of each fish was $10.
