THE SILENCE.

In what far country shall I find you, dear, Who waited at the end of every day With comfort, and with blessing, when the way Was rough to climb, and weariness was near? Will it be springtime or the waning year? Morning or evening, golden skies or gray? And, oh, what word will be for me to say To tell my heart out and outbrave my fear? You will not answer, though I wait to know!

You give no sign, although 1 wait to see The frail spring shadows throng, the white clouds pass, The apple boughs shed drifts of petal'd snow-Is it from some far heaven you call to me, Or do you wait beneath this hillside grass?

Czar Declares Time Ripe for Extending Princi- Holy synod since 1881. ples of Religious Tolerance in Fundamenta Laws.

In the Czar's degree, made public recently, after referring to the efforts of his predecessors, particularly his father, to add to the welfare of the Russian people, the Czar announces his decision to grant freedom of religion to all his subjects who profess non-orthodox creeds, and to improve the conditions of village life and those of the local nobility and peasantry.

Among the measures outlined by his majesty for the attainment of these ends is reform of the rural laws, which is to be effected with the advice of persons who possess the confidence of the people. The system of administration in the various governments and districts is to be examined by the representatives of the different localities concerned, with the view of effecting the necessary amendments.

Measures are also to be taken to relieve the peasantry of the burdens of forced

The decree, which was issued in com memoration of the anniversary of the birthday of Alexander III, is considered to be the most significant act of state since the emancipation of the serfs. The public hails it as the proclamation of a new era, opening up bright prospects of the early improvement of Russian internal adminis-

The text of the decree is as follows: "On ascerding the thrones of our ancestors, by the providence of God, we make a solemn vow before the Almighty and our conscience to guard sacredly the centuries old pillars of Russian power, and to dedicate our life to the service of our beloved Fatherland in indefatigable solicitude for our subjects. We chose, in order to assure the well being of our people, the way indicated by the memorable deeds of our predecessors, especially our never-to-be-forgotten father. God pleased to interrupt the deeds, of our father by his early death and thus laid on us the sacred duty of completing the consolidation of or-der and truth begun by him in conformity with the exigencies of national life. "The troubles agitating our country, which, to our deep regret, have partly been shown by designs hostile to the state and partly engendered by doctrines foreign to Russian life, hinder the general work of ameliorating the conditions of our people. These troubles confuse the public mind, remove the people from productive labor, and often ruin families dear to our heart necessary to the internal development of the country. "In demanding the fulfilment of this, our will, while remaining strongly opposed to any violation of the normal course of national life, and having confidence that all will loyally discharge their local duties, we are irrevocably decided to satisfy the needs of which the state has become ripe, and have deemed it expedient to strengthen and decree the undeviating observance of the principles of tolerance laid down by the fundamental laws of the Russian empire, which, recognizing the Russian church as the ruling one, grant to all our subjects of other religions and to all foreign persuasions freedom of creed and worship in accordance with other rites, and we are further resolved to continue this active carrying out of measures for the improvement of the material position of the ortho-dox rural clergy, while enabling them to take a larger share in intellectual and pub-

REFORM IN VILLAGE LIFE.

"In accordance with impending measures for the consolidation of the national economy, the efforts of the state credit institutions, and especially the nobles' and peasants' banks should be directed to strengthening and developing the welfare and fundamental pillars of Russian village life and that of the local nobility and peasantry. These principles marked out by us for the revision of the laws of the rural popu-lation are, when formulated, to be referred to the provincial government councils, so that with the assistance of persons enjoying the public confidence they may be further developed and adapted to the special conditions of individual localities. In this work the fundamental principles of the inviolability of communal property is to be maintained, while at the same time means are to be found to render it easy for the individual to sever connections with the community to which he belongs if he so desires

'Without delay measures must be taken to release the peasants from the present burdensome liability of forced labor. "Thorough reform is to be effected in the provincial governments and district administrations by the local representa-tives, while attention will be devoted to securing closer co-operation between the communal and parochial trustees of the orthodox churches whenever possible.

'Calling upon all our subjects to cooperate in strengthening the moral foun-dations of the family, school and public life, under which alone the well-being of the people and the confidence of everyone in the stability of his rights can develop, we command our ministers and chief officials concerned in this matter to submit to us their views regarding the execution of our intentions.

The extension of self-government to the smaller communities, corresponding with the township organization of the United States, is regarded as a great victory for the Zemstvos (district and provincial assemblies), while the retention of the communal system, with greater freedom of the peasants and landowners, expressed through their local committees on agricul-

MARKS DECADE'S PROGRESS. Forty years have gone by since Czar Alexander II effected the greatest internal change Russia has known, by the emancipation of the serfs. First on the imperial domains in 1858, then by a ukase, issued early in March, 1861, the serfs throughout the empire were set free in the course of two years to the number of 23,000,000. His grandson, Nicholas II, has now enlarged the bounds of freedom in Russia by instituting religious freedom. This, too, is a stupendous change. The Holy synod, the board of government of the Græco-Roman, officially called the Orthodox Catholic faith the established religion of the empire, bears none too good a reputation for toleration. Tolstoi at present lies under its ban of excommunication, though it does not appear that the consequences have in this case been strictly enforced. The Stundists, the Doukhobors and other sects outside the the pale of the national church have suffered only in recent years for their persistent nonconformity under the rigorous administration of M. Pobiedonostzeff, who has held the office of the procurator of the

But the czar is the head of the church. He appoints to every office, but he has never claimed the right of deciding theological and dogmatic questions. With the exception of restraints laid on the Hebrews, all religious hitherto might be freely professed, but the dissenters have been subthem complete freedom in the exercise of their particular religions The Orthodox Greek Catholics, of course. form the vast majority, of the nation, numbering at least 90,000,000. Roman Catholies are about 12,000,000, Protestants, 6,000,000 Mohammedans 14,000,000 Hebrews 5,000,000, while there are as many as fifty distinct sectarian divisions of nonconformists from the national church, including the Old Believers, and smaller fanatical bodies classed as rationalists and

There are probably four million Russian Sectarians, and the Holy synod recently ordained a religious campaign against them in those provinces where their numbers have latterly been largely increasing. The powers of the specially appointed missioners were supplemented by those of the police and apostacy from the Orthodox church has all along been treated as a criminal offense.

Gallstones

Gallstones are the cause of biliary colic, attacks of which are usually marked by intense pain and alarming collapse. Gallstones are composed of the more solid ingredients of the bile, so that they are "stones" only in the fact that they are hard and composed in part of mineral salts, such as normally are found in the bile, stone in this region and in other cavities of the body is hence no cause of wonderment, but is a result of the presence of the solid constituents in too great, or of the watery elements in too small, quantity.

The presence of gallstones in the gall- in much good." bladder or in the narrow passages through which the bile flows, from the liver to the intestinal canal, is not always announced by attacks of sharp colicky pain. An in-definite soreness or pain of irregular duration and varying degree in the pit of the stomach, or from that point to the right, along the border line well marked by the wall, may be due to gallstones or to the collections of thickened masses of bile, which are the pregresses of callstones or to the collections of thickened masses of bile, and young energies, among high and low, which are the precursors of gallstones. masses of thickened bile may themselves occasion biliary colic of a milder form. Biliary colic is one of nature's danger signals, but one rarely heeded by the sufferer. The explanation of the nature of this trouble, already given in this paper, should suggest the means of prevention. The presence of the gallstones or of thickened masses of bile indicates the need of a larger quantity of liquid and a smaller quantity of solid elements in the food. To of all kinds as an experiment. drink more water and eat less solid food. It is interesting to note that among English physicians the popular treatment for gallstones formerly, consisted, in large part, in restricting the diet; while in Germany a liberal use of the spring waters, notably the Carlsbad, was prescribed. A recognition of the value of the two methods combined has resulted in the adoption of both these measures by physicians. Solids are given more sparingly and water more

Devotion to the pleasures of the table is not consistent with a healthy state of the liver and bile ducts. Drunkards as Lunatics.

Inwa Law Has Made Stringent Regulations Regard-

They passed a law in Iowa last year per mitting the confinement of confirmed drunkards in lunatic asylums. It made little stir but within eight months three hundred alcoholic patients were under restraint and treatment. An Iowa dispatch says that inebriates continue to flow into the state asylums at the rate of about fifty a month, and that an Iowa court has just ruled that their constitutional rights are not violated by their detention. Some of the inebriates don't like to be shut up, but the treatment they get seems to be humane and salutary. Their liquor is stopped, and they have to work on farms, and are encouraged to improve their habits. When they seem to be cured they are discharged, and report says that, so far, about seventyfive per cent. of the cases have so resulted. This seems like excellent management of drunkards. Men who cannot, or will not, control their thirst ought not to be left at large to get themselves and others into mischief. Neither should they be sent to jail. If they are irresponsible because of their progensities, they should be shut up and looked after until they are cured, and while under setting the should be sh while under restraint they should be made to work for their living. The Iowa method seems a good deal more enlightened than the New York plan of keeping up an munal system, with greater freedom of endless chain of dipsomaniacs between withdrawal therefrom meets the wisdom of the Handbard and the Island. An easy, legal the peasants and landowners, expressed method of securing timely periods of sion for unmanageable drunkards ought to make for the peace of families and the diminution of drunkenness. Men bave no moral right to be drunken. An Oklahoma Carnival.

Some of the Things They Did at the Cattlemen's

G. M. Walden, president of the Kausas City Live Stock Exchange, is just home from the convention of the Oklahoma Cattle Growers' Association, which was held in Oklahoma City, Tuesday to Thursday of last week. Mr. Walden tells one incident of that great gathering, which has hitherto been unpublished, but which shows very vividly the contrasts which still exist in that region "My headquarters," said Mr. Walden, "were in the Lee, and directly across the street was one of the big gambling palaces, which ran wide open and were packed all day and night. Wednesday, as I was entertaining some friends in my room, I heard some shots fired across the street, and I ran out to see what had happened. At the same time I heard the notes of Zack Mulhall's very fine cowboy band, which was marching up thirty-six strong to head the parade. The shots came from this gambling hall where a big gambler had just murdered Ira Love, a fine cattleman. They had had some words and a fist fight, but had separated. The gambler saw Love later and shot him in the back, after knocking him down, for he was a much larger man than Love. As I reached the sidewalk they were carrying Love, dead, out of the gambler's place.

"Just at this juncture the band turned jected to persecution by nontolerant offi-cials, which it may be presumed will give these treet, playing Hot Time.' The men, of course, heard the shots, and as they came up they looked to see whence they came. They saw Love's dead body brought out as they were opposite the gambling place. With one accord every man in that band stopped 'Hot time' and without preconcerted signal, began to from the ridiculous to the sublime, with a vengence.

That cattle convention was the greatest thing that ever happened in the Southwest. I saw 25,000 persons at the great roping contest, and it was the best sport I ever witnessed. The steers ran about through yond control, and the only wonder was that many were not killed. There were four greatgambling places in town, and each had games that I could not even name, and fills a prophecy which I made about 1873 or '74. The new departure for the Chicago, Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway will certainly bring it a great deal of business.

GEO. H. DANIELS, I know most all of them. Of course, keno, faro, chuck-aluck, craps and all the more familiar games were running in full blast, wide open. I went into what was called the squarest place there, which was in a service to Nebraska Colorado, Utah, California hall as big as the Casino here, and dozens of games were going, every one doing all Milwaukee & St. Paul Railway, in connection the business it was capable of, and men with the Union Pacific Railroad, Railroad men pushing and shoving to bet. Out at the roping contest I saw one game on a table a generation ago, predicted that such a natural in the open air, and more than a bushel of route would some day become an important part silver dollars were piled up there as 'bank.' of the great transcontinental highway. At the hotel no one slept from Tuesday such as normally are found in the bile, only in a soluble state. The occurrence of their horses right into the bar and the office, and literally 'everything went.'

Cannon's Growing Fame He is Declared the Champion of Pie Eaters in

"Uncle Joe" Cannon is the greatest pie eater in Congress, says the St. Louis Postago, is in the class with the next speaker of the House. "Uncle Joe's" pie-eating ability is an accomplishment of compara tively recent development. For the past two or three years Mr. Cannon has suffered in tensely from recurrent gout in the second joint of the long finger on the left hand. Frequently he has had to call a doctor at night to secure rest and sleep. His phy-sician was unable to account for the states man's gout for a long time. Finally he advised "Uncle Joe" to quit eating meat ed this physician's advice for a week Then there was no more gont in the second joint of the long finger of his left hand.

The other day he rushed into the public part of the Senate restaurant and ordered two pieces of lemon pie and a glass of wa-ter. When he had devoured these he ordered a piece of apple pie. He held up the long finger of his left hand. The second joint was swollen and inflamed. "Like a blank fool," said he, "I went to a dinner at Dalzell's house and ate a lot of meat. The result is the reappearance of gout in this finger. Mr. Doctor has told me to let meat alone. If I do not follow his advice I shall not sleep any more. I don't like pie at all, but it is either pie for me or nothing at the midday lunch. At dinner I eat all the vegetables and bread and fruit that my hotel will give me. If I eat a piece of meat half as big as my hand the second joint of this finger begins to hurt. Hereafter no meat for me. I am a pietarian henceforth."
