

Pine Grove Mention.

W. H. Grove, a fireman on the Pennsy, is home for a few days. Geo. W. Potter and wife spent Sunday with old acquaintances at Scotia.

Davy Barr is recovering from his injuries nicely.

Will Gibson spent Sunday with his family, who have been guests at Aunt Polly Mitchell's on Main street for some weeks.

Rubber Tires Saved Four From Lightning.

CLEARFIELD, Pa., May 37.—Lightning struck a tree under which the Rev. J. M. Wardell, pastor of the Presbyterian church, had driven for shelter.

New Advertisements.

FOR SALE.—A good surrey, buggy and single harness. Inquire of J. KYLE McFARLANE, 48-20-4f

New Advertisements.

FOR SALE.—Nicer located lots at State College can be purchased cheap by applying to Mrs. E. E. BROWN, Boalsburg, Pa.

New Advertisements.

FOR SALE.—A fine top buggy almost new. Inquire of W. P. Himes, Bellefonte, Pa.

Howard.

George Wister spent a few days this week with his family.

Milesburg's Memorial Ceremonies.

On Sunday, May 24th, 1903, Post 261 of Milesburg, accompanied by the Milesburg lodge of Odd Fellows, Knights of the Golden Eagle, of Milesburg, and the Milesburg Hook and Ladder company, attended the memorial services in the Baptist church of that place.

Real Estate Transfers.

The following real estate transfers have been recorded during the past week by Recorder John C. Rowe:

Divorce Notice.

Thomas J. Dale } in the Court of Common Pleas of Centre County, No. 24, Nov. Term, 1903.

Shoes.

THE NEW SPRING FOOTWEAR. The collection of Women's and Children's Shoes the Oxfords for spring and summer wear, which you are invited to come to see, is the best and broadest we have ever had to show.

Shoes.

YEAGER & DAVIS, Shoe Money Savers, Bellefonte and Philipsburg, Pa.

Divorce Notice.

To My Wife, Mrs. J. A. G. Arcey, Clerk of the Orphans' court of said county of Centre, do hereby certify that an orphan's court held at Bellefonte, the 4th day of May, A. D., 1903, before the honorable the judges of said court, on motion a rule was granted upon the heirs and legal representatives of Isabella and Nancy M. Jamison, deceased, to come into court on the first Tuesday of June next to accept or refuse to accept at the valuation, or show cause why the real estate of said deceased should not be sold. Same notice to be given as in requisition.

MARRIAGE LICENSES.

Following is the list of marriage licenses granted by orphan's court clerk, A. G. Arcey, during the past week.

COURT PROCLAMATION.

Special Term.—Whereas the Hon. John G. Love, President Judge of the Court of Common Pleas of the third district consisting of the County of Centre, having issued his precept bearing date the 7th day of May, 1903, and to me directed, for holding a special Term of Court of Common Pleas of Oyer and Terminer, General Jail delivery, Orphans Court and Quarter Sessions of the Peace, in Bellefonte, for the County of Centre and the commencement on the fourth Monday of June next, being the 22nd day of June, 1903. Notice is hereby given that all persons summoned as Jurors are hereby notified to attend.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The lover of fiction—especially in the form of short stories—will turn with pleasure to the latest of the Cosmopolitan. Here appear a charming love-story by Francis Willing Wharton, beautifully illustrated by Thomas Mitchell Pierce; a dramatic railroad story by R. E. Farham; a romance of the business world by Trumbull White, and contributions by H. R. Martin and Henry Seton Merriman. In the same number, which is remarkable for the great variety of topics that are discussed, Edward Everett Hale writes on "Old-Age Pensions"; Dr. Albert Shaw, editor of the Review of Reviews, discusses "Journalism as a profession"; H. G. W. advances some more of his ideas on "Love and the Cultivation of the Imagination"; and Mary E. Thornton gives some practical advice on "How to Care for the Sick in the Home." An essay on "The Rose of Yesterday and To-day" is superbly illustrated with photographs; some fine illustrations being also a feature of an article on "Gateways; Artistic and Characteristic"; a contribution on "Floral Head-dresses" and an interesting account of "An English Garden City." The personal articles include character sketches of George Gilbert Williams, the great banker; William Barclay Parsons, chief engineer of the New York Rapid Transit Commission; and Baron Strachona and Mount Royal, High Commissioner for Canada. There are also contributions by William R. Lightfoot, Antoinette Van Hoesen, John Brisbane Walker, and Julian Hawthorne. In all, there are twenty-one stories and articles in the June Cosmopolitan.

CATAWISSA CAR AND FOUNDRY COMPANY.

PLANT COVERS ¼ ACRES. Prompt Service. Good Quality. Lowest Quotations. BUILDERS AND MANUFACTURERS OF BITUMINOUS MINE CARS, CAPACITY 25 PER DAY. CASTINGS, FORGINGS AND MINE EQUIPMENTS GENERALLY. Mine Car Wheels, spoke or hub oiler, A SPECIALTY. Our wheels are all tested before leaving works and will run 5000 miles without wearing. We use nothing but charcoal iron or steel for our wheels. You can't make a good mine car wheel with any other mixture. Note some of our prices: Mine car wheels $2.00 to $2.50 per 100 weight. Mine cars from $25.00 to $40.00 per car, delivered. Our $40 car is 4 gauge, wheel 18in. in diameter, axle 2" x 2" 48-17-2m

Dividend Paying.

MINING AND INDUSTRIAL STOCKS. Your investment is doubly safeguarded and good rates of interest paid for money invested. No wildcat propositions. Send self addressed envelope for particulars. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Write or call upon GEO. T. BUSH, Bellefonte, Pa.

The Saturday Ceremonies.

On Saturday, May 30th, 1903, which is Memorial Day, Post 261 of Milesburg, will observe the day as follows: Accompanied by the Curtin cornet band, a detail from the post will visit the Fairview cemetery at 8:30 a. m. Jno. A. Daley will speak at services there. The line of march will be taken up and those who attend the services at Fairview will proceed to Advent church, three miles west, and will there join the full post and hold services in that cemetery at 10:30 a. m. Col. Wilbur F. Reeder, of Bellefonte, will deliver the address. The March Creek, Advent and Runville Sunday schools have been invited and will help with the services singing appropriate selections. Leaving there the line of march will be resumed and proceed to the post room for refreshments and from thence to the cemeteries at Curtin, where services will be held at 1:30 p. m. Rev. R. H. Wharton, of Milesburg, M. E. church, will deliver the oration. The Curtin Sunday school will be in attendance and will sing appropriate selections. The procession will then return to Milesburg and hold services in the old cemetery. The address there will be delivered by the Rev. Mr. Lathrop, of the Baptist church, Milesburg. The Odd Fellows, Knights of Golden Eagle, P. O. S. of A. and Fire company will join the parade, together with all the Sunday schools of Milesburg.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Dividend Paying.

MINING AND INDUSTRIAL STOCKS. Your investment is doubly safeguarded and good rates of interest paid for money invested. No wildcat propositions. Send self addressed envelope for particulars. Satisfaction guaranteed or money refunded. Write or call upon GEO. T. BUSH, Bellefonte, Pa.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.

Books, Magazines, Etc.

The June McClure's is one of the best rounded out and uniformly attractive numbers this magazine ever issued. The number opens with a mastery appreciation by John La Farge of the three great French artists, Delacroix, Decamps, and Diaz, and illustrated with some exquisite reproductions in tint. Henry Harland's new serial, "My Friend Prospero," cannot fail to be a drawing card. The story opens in Italy, and promises to excel in every particular in which one looks for excellence. Two first class articles are "An Ocean Graveyard," by P. T. McGrath, and "The Swimming Hole," by Eugene Wood; the first a stirring account of some of the famous wrecks and rescues of the Newfoundland coast, the second a paper that no man who has ever been a boy will read without emotion. Miss Tebbell's Standard Oil chapter "The Great Consumption," which one is tempted to pronounce the best yet, relates the final discomfiture of the independents in their efforts to bring Mr. Rockefeller and his colleagues to trial for conspiracy, and the upbuilding of the mammoth trust. "Comedy of the Gatekeepers," a symposium of answers given by civil service applicants furnishes two pages of excellent fun, while Ray Stannard Baker's article on Peter Cooper Hewitt's three great inventions provides a much needed and excellent popular account of what Lord Kelvin considered the most important work in electrical science being done in America today. The three short stories are of the first order. "The Little Master of Heat Estate," "The Looking Glass," and "40 Message," Arthur Stannard Pier's "The Triumph," goes out literally in a blaze of glory, the episode of a burning gas well, that makes a good story by itself. Florence Wilkinson has three little poems of childhood, one of which, "A Botanical Adventure," is a masterpiece. In fact, the number simply bulges out with good things.