Somehow, sometime, somewhere. Perchance some word in the right tone spoke May lift a cloud from the darkening brow, Or help to soothe a heart that is broken Sometime, somewhere, somehow.

Perchance a lock that is true and kindly May rouse in some heart a hope sublime; Or control a passion rising blindly Somewhere, somehow, sometime. -M. V. Thomas.

A LEAF FROM HIS SALAD DAYS. Judge Wyndham stood in the window looking out into the world of whirling whiteness. The snow lent a new aspect to the familiar view, and the sunlight edged the black trees with glowing gold.

Presently the man turned, his mouth firm under the thick gray mustache. 'I've said all I have to say Mary. You might as well go."
Molly Wyndham frowned openly at him.

"So have I, papa—said all that I have to say. As to going—well, if I go, I stay." "I meant, go to your room."

'And I meant, go to granny's' "I see. Your grandmother is a very silly woman, who has always spoiled you out-rageously, but I doubt whether even she, in this case _____', Molly rose impatiently. "Granny always does exactly what I—advise her, papa, and you know it as well as I do. Good-by."

He looked at her reflectively, mildly,

He looked at her renectively, mildly, half-admiringly, and the look meant, she knew, the most unswerving obstinacy.

"Good-by," he said, gently, and she left the room, closing the door with care.

Wyndham sat down and put a log on the dying fire. It was done, then. The big split he had always more or less expected between his daughter and himself had come. He would not consent to Molly's come. He would not consent to Molly's marrying Ambrose Stanham, and Molly would marry the man without consent. Wyndham stared at the fire, but his face did not soften, and no sigh disturbed the fixed lines of his mouth. The Wyndham obstinacy stood him in good stead. It was as much a feature in the family as the remarkably clean-cut chin that they were all so proud of and had always been much more considered by its possessors. A Wyndham who had not the obstinacy would have been as great an anomaly as a trunkless elephant, and he,

Frederic, son of Frederic Lewis, had been brought up in this belief. Stanham was not the man for Molly and, if Molly insisted on having him, she was to be cut off from the several advantages, ma-terial and otherwise, that accrued to her position as the youngest female Wyndham. The log blazed and the man who watched it did not move

Then suddenly the door opened and Molly came in, wincing a trifle in a way she had in the presence of those on whom she wished to make an impression.

"Papa, here is Mrs. Catherwood." Wyndham arose. The tall, rather broad woman, broader than necessary in a gorgeous fur coat, laughed and held out her hand.

"Mrs. Catherwood since '75. Before that date of dates, Isabel Gaines."

Molly watched her father with the un-Wyndhamlike forgetfulness of recent wrath that she had from her dead mother. "Isabel Gaines!" he held out his hands in evident embarrassment, and his daughter fanoied that he flushed, but it might have been the fire which just then leaped up and danced merrily over the man and the woman whose greeting was so conventional, whose faces so full of interest in

"I knew your father years ago, my dear," Mrs. Catherwood began. sitting down and throwing back her veil. "We were engaged once-weren't we?" There were engaged once—weren't we?" There was an amusing note of doubt in her voice.
"We were, indeed." Wyndham answered. "I—was very much in love with you, Isabel."
Molly, utterly forgetful of the expectant Mr. Stanham, who was supposedly passing the afternoon at his telephone waiting for her to call him up, sank suddenly into for her to call him up, sank suddenly into a low chair in the shadow. While her father and his guest asked and answered the questions usual to such a situation the girl studied their two faces. Mrs. Catherwood's was a rather fine one, though its lines were somewhat blurred with the encroaching of fat, the predominating look in it was one of quiet, humorous strength.

Her eyes were strange—they looked like eyes once fierce, grown gentle through a never ending, not unamiable amusement in human follies. Molly liked her. "The judge," as the girl called her fath-er, as she turned to him, smiled at his guest with his usual urban courtesy but he looked less judge-like than usual. "California!" he was saying. "How very charming !" "Oh, yes, very good as to climate—you may know the saying that while heaven presumably rejoices in a fine mild climate. socially the other place may be preferable. There have been times when climate was not all-sufficing—"

She laughed and Molly chuckled, softly. "Is this big girl your only child?"

Wyndham started. 'Yes. I lost a boy years ago." "Ah, And your wife-"Died when Molly was four."
Mrs. Catherwood turned and looked at the girl in the corner.

'Ah, then, you two must be—much to each other."

Neither of the others spoke, and the Wyndham obstinacy suddenly rushed to his eyes and to his mouth, as they stared half in embarrassment, half in defiance at each other.

"I never had a girl," Mrs. Catherwood went on. "I have one boy. How old are you—Molly?" "Twenty-one, I-am going to be married

It was a sudden resolution and the girl shivered with pleasure in the doing of its conception.

"Married! How delightful! Think of you with a daughter to be married next week, Fred !" Wyndham did not answer, and Molly went on, demurely enough, but with a delicious sensation of being under-

"Father refuses his consent. He has cast me off, and I am going—when you have left!"

"I know, papa, but you can't put me out of the door by force, before Mrs. Cath-erwood, and I like her and I'm going to stay a few minutes longer."

Isabel Catherwood leaned over and caught the girl's hand in hers. "Why do you object, Fred? who's the man ? "His name is Stanham, and he's-he's a dear. Father objects to him because he wears a buttonhole, and has a manservant. He objects to father because—well, it's easy to all why he should and does object to father." She pointed a small rosy finger at her astonished father, and Mrs. Catherwood "Yes. I should object to you most awfully as a father-in-law." Then she laughed delightfully.

"It is kind of you to take this interest in my affairs, but—"

Then dropping Molly's enthusiastic hand Mrs. Catherwood wheeled about facing him and asked him point blank to specify his objections to the young man in question, and to his own amazement, Frederic Wyndham found himself obeying her.

"My chief reason is that the man is a fool, in love one minute with one woman, the next with another. As he's been engaged twice since he came to town-

"Three times, papa."
"That is rather serious Molly."

Mrs. Catherwood's eyes changed.
"I fear I must admit that that quality s a bad one. 'Pooh! He didn't care a penny for either of—of the others. Mrs. Brancepeth is years older than he, and—and the other girl—'she broke down. 'But he does love

'Of course you think so, my dear.' Wyndham smiled as he spoke. A new ally seemed to have sprung out of the for-gottenness of twenty five years, and an able

'I know it, papa.'
'I offered to give my consent in a year,

The girl arose.
"If he didn't look at another girl in all the year, and that's perfectly impossible. That's why I must marry him now!" "Why is it impossible if, as you say, the fellow loves you !" Wyndham spoke wearily; they had disoussed the point so often.

"Because—because he is that kind of a man that women care for. He's an artist, But it's me he loves. Oh, it is Mrs.

Catherwood !" Then Isabel Catherwood took from her pocket a bottle of smelling salts and after a thoughtful sniff, spoke : "Fred, do you remember Ella Banks?"

"Certainly I do." "And Sue Wright?"

"And the little French girl, what did they call her. Alonette something—?"
"Alonette? Oh, yes, I think so. Curly pair and tapering fingers. Yes." "And-me?"

"You? I don't understand what you mean." "You were nineteen when you were in love with Ella, weren't you?"
"Oh, in love! That's saying a good deal.

—liked her."
"You loved her. At least, you thought you did. You were engaged to Sue Wright when you were twenty one." "Yes she threw me over and married— whom did she marry?"

"And Alonette. Alonette didn't throw ou over." Wyndham flushed, then he frowned. "That is only ancient history, however. Tell me more about your own life. You said California, I believe?" "Once at a dance at the Hubbards you asked me to marry you. I was in love with you, Fred. We were engaged for a year, and then—it didn't break, it dissolved. Then you went away. Whom did you

Then you went away. Whom did you marry?"

"Mother was a Miss Carson, of Kensucky," Molly spoke softly. "There's her

The picture hanging in the shadow.
Reaching out his hand Wyndham turned on a glow of shaded light that fell on the beautiful young face painted by a master of his art, and for a minute no one spoke. Then Mrs. Catherwood said:

"It was she you loved." Wyndham bowed his white head. "And the-the rest of us? The rest of us were merely episodical-" He turned, something in his eyes that smote his daughter, who arose, and, slipping her hand through his arm, stood facing the stranger who was hurting him.

'Yes," he said, shortly, the 'rest of you were merely episodical.'

'And—afterward," she persisted, with an unexpected tactlessness. "Afterward?"

'Oh, do be still!" cried the girl. can you? There were no episodes after-

Then Isabel Catherwood's face changed again—stooping she kissed Molly's cheek. ""Oh, you dear," she said gently. Then, turning to Wyndham: "Are you not convinced, Fred? Can't Molly's sweetheart have episodes-be-fore-

Wyndham dropped Molly's arm, but his eyes held hers and his heart and hers were in close sympathy that moment. "Oh, father !"

"We—will try, Molly."
Then he turned to Mrs. Catherwood. "How long are you to be in town?" he asked, formally.

"I shall be here for a week, Fred. And -you forgive me?" "Forgive you?"

The obstinacy stood out like a scar on his face, but his smile was fearless. "Yes, for reminding you of those days—your salad days?" Molly—speak for me."
And Molly spoke by kissing her father.
He held out his hand.

"I—shall hope to see you again—"

Chrysanthemum Starvation. It is a Common Complaint at This Season.

The September food supply must be increased if we are to get the best from our chrysanthemums during October. It must be remembered throughout the season of development that chrysanthemums are thirsty creatures and demand plenty to drink; especially that they are insured against dyspepsia, that they are hearty eaters and there is very little danger of overfeeding. The best way to supply the food during September—for immediate results—is in the form of liquid fertilizers. Whether manure is used from the cow stables or hen roosts for the plants in country gardens, or the powdered fertilizers bought from the florists, or rich street sweepings secured for the asking, for city chrysanthe-mums, it should be placed in a bucket and hot water poured over it to extract the strength. When the liquid is cold and of a dark-brown color it is ready to apply in generous quantity about the chrysanthemum plants whose buds are swelling with promise of early bloom.

Census of the Philippines. Population About 6,976,574—Cebu the Total

A preliminary report received by the A preliminary report received by the war department from Brig. Gen. Joseph P. Sanger, superintendent of the Philippine census, shows that the population of the islands is approximately 6,976,574 persons, including about 650,000 members of wild tribes.

It is evident from the report that census taking in the Philippines was exciting work, particularly in the provinces of Bulucan, Rizal, Laguna, Bantangas and Albay, where bands of ladrones made things interesting. Four enumerators were caught, but the schedules of only one of them was molested. Armed men opposed the census takers in the island of Camiguin. Gen. Sanger speaks highly of the work of the native enumerators.

The most populous province is Cebu, with 651,621 civilized inhabitants. Manila province has 319,941 and Cavite, adjoining, 134,438 civilized inhabitants.

PEOPLE WE KNOW.

THEY ARE BELLEFONTE PEOPLE, AND WHAT THEY SAY IS OF LOCAL INTEREST.

When an incident like the following occurs right here at home, it is bound to carry weight with our readers. So many strange occurrences go the rounds of the press; are published as facts, that people become skeptical. On one subject skepticism is rapidly disappearing. This is due to the actual experience of our citizens and their public utterances regarding them. The doubter must doubt no more in the face of such evidence as this. The public statement of a reputable citizen living right here at home, one whom you can see every day, leaves no ground for the skeptic to stand on.

"Doan's Kidney Pills did more towards freeing me from terrible pains in my back than any other medicine ever did. I had taken so many kinds and so many prescriptions without any perceptible gain that I was unprepared for the improvement I received from taking Doan's Kidney Pills. I read statements about Bellefonte people who had been cured by their use and I got them at F. Potts Green's drug store. After taking them I felt so well that I walked down town with my husband something I had not done for
