Two Interesting Animals at the New York Zoological Park

The popular name snow leopard seems almost to involve a contradiction of terms, for leopards, as well as lions and tigers, have always been associated in the minds of most of us with the torrid zone. The popular idea, that the larger species of wild animals belonging to the cat kind are confined to the tropics is an essentially mistaken one. Our own big cat, the puma, for example, is at home at least as far north as British Columbia, and extending through every variety of climate, lives as far south as the frigid extremity of Patagonia, thus possessing perhaps the most extensive longitudinal range of any living mammal.

Even the tiger, of which, together with the last- mentioned animal, there are now remarkably fine specimens at the zoological parks, is not supposed to have been originally a tropical animal. Its fossil remains are associated with those of the mammoth in the New Siberian Islands, which are situated well toward the pole within the Arctic circle, and living specimens are yet found as far north as Lake Baikal in Siberia.

But the member of the Felidae apparently best fitted by nature to with-stand a cold climate is without doubt Felis onca, the long-tailed or snow leopard. This animal never descends beyond the snow line of the mountains it inhabits. It is associated in the high lands of central Asia with Siberian ibex, the big-horned argali and Marco Polo's sheep, animals more or less akin to our Rocky Mountain goat and sheep.

The specimen at the park, a fine male in splendid health and condition, although not yet fully grown, is at least as large as any ordinary leopard, and on account of the long and thick coat of fur with which it is covered, it looks much heavier.

Indeed, in this respect it seems to suggest similar variation from the ordinary type to that exhibited by the long-haired breed of domestic cats when compared with our common fireside pussies.

The color of the snow-leopard is a gray, inclining to buff. A few large, dark spots show about the lowerparts, and a number of smaller ones congregate about the head and the neck. The back and the sides are marked with faded looking brown rings of rosetti. The comparatively enormous tail of the animal is fully as long as his body.

"Chang" is the first of his species ever seen in this country. He is the sole survivor of four of the species collected by Mr. Hagenbeck's agent in the northern border of Thibet, and is one of the only three snow leopards now in captivity, of which Berlin has one and London another.

Mr. Hornaday, director of the New York Zoological Park, says that sometimes as many as two thousand tanned skins of the snow leopard are brought from the interior if China to Shanghai in a single year, but that "not one live specimen accompanies them. The distance," he says, "is too great, and the difficulties to be encountered with a live animal in a cage are too numerous to tempt even a Chinaman to try to surmount them. Naturally, these animals are very costly; the price of our specimen was nine hundred dollars."

Another late addition to the attractions of the park is a fine large eland (Oreas canna), the giant species of antelope that equals an ox in size, reaching the height of nearly or quite six feet at the withers. For all its ponderous proportions, the eland is not an ungraceful-looking creature. The expression is mild, and the head is decidedly of the antelope type. It seems as though such an animal might be domesticated here, as it has been in numerous instances in England. The flesh, when the eland is properly fed, is superior to beef in delicacy and flavor; and certainly an animal that without special breeding puts on a weight of from eight hundred to one thousand five hundred pounds and more, is worth experimenting with. One peculiarity of this magnificent animal should recommend it for the great plains of the Southwest, and that is its capacity of going for a long time without water. The ease with which it is reared, its mild disposition, the fact that it breeds freely in captivity, the great value of its hide as well as of its flesh, and the rapid improvement it shows under scientific cultivation, all conspire to increase the regret with which we see it rapidly approaching extermination in its native country. Few indeed of the wild members of the order of hoofed mammals exhibit so many claims for domestication and preservation by the human race. Particularly is this the case in a country like our own, which includes regions reproducing in so many particulars the character of the particular parts of the African continent included in the range of these giant antelopes.

——The death of John K. Cowan removed the most bitter political enemy Senator Gorman ever had. It was the Independent Democratic movement organized by Cowan that led to the overthrow of the Gorman machine in 1895, turned the State over to the Republicans for the first time in thirty years and temporarily retired Gorman from the United States Senate.

——"And do you think," he asked, "that men progress after death?"

"Well, she replied, "if they don't, it would almost seem useless for some of them to die."—Chicago Record.

A Hopeless Task.

Scottish folk are proverbially canny and prudent in money matters, and the following shows that the younger generation is no exception to the rule:

A teacher in a lowland school was taking mental arithmetic with a class of boys. She asked one urchin:

"How much would your mother give you to buy four pounds of tea at one and six a pound?"

"We ne'er get sae much at once as that, mum."

"Never mind that. Four pounds at one and six?

"But we canna afford the one and six, mum. We always hae the one and two."

"Answer the question. What would she give you to pay for four pounds of tea at—"

"Nawthin', mum."

"What do you mean by nothing?"

"She'd na' gie me ony bawbees. She'd tell me tae ask the mon tae pit it doon."

"Oh, dear! Oh, dear! But supposing she did?

With a pitying smile came the reply:

"A can aee ye've ne'er met ma mither, mum."

——Appendicitis is attributed by a Frenchman—M. Lucas Championnier—to the eating of much meat.

He finds that in England and America, where the consumption of meat is large appendicitis is five or six times as frequent as in France, and in two localities, where no meat is eaten, the disease is unknown. M. Chauvel shows that in the army the disease is much more rare in Algiers and Tunis than in France, while among the native African soldiers—almost exclusively vegetarian—the cases are very few.

A Warning Needed.

A small (but precocious) boy, aged four, was playing on the bed, and sliding down it. His aunt, fearful of his venturesomeness, said: "Take care; you are sure to fall." The reply came instantly: "Then you ought to put up a notice saying 'This hill is dangerous."—Westminister Gazette.

The tree frog said, but hushed,
Embarrassed' when in modesty,
The graceful peach tree blushed.
