THE REAL AND UNREAL

You take the crowded city street. With life and shops galore: I'll take the little woodland path Down by the river shore. You take the public garden, where All is arranged by plan; I'll take the scenes laid out by God And undisturbed by man.

You take the fountain on the lawn And listen to its tale: I'll listen to the little brook That murmurs through the vale. You live the artificial life, And I will live the real. And joy will come to me in mine That yours can ne'er reveal. -Joe Cone, in C. B. Fry's Magazin

ASA'S GOOD REIGN.

Rehoboam, the first king of Judah, had a spasm of industry during which he forti-fied the key cities of the southern kingdom, but then he relapsed into idolatry and polygamy. He was soon forced to buy a trace from the king of Egypt, for which he paid the treasures of David and the golden shields of Solomon. Of Rehoboam's son and successor, the shame record is, "he walked in all the sins of his father."

But Asa, the third king of Judah, in spite of his vicious ancestry and unfavor-able environment, proved himself noble, heroic, and pious. A high and hopeful note is struck in the dolorous record when it is said of him. "He did that which was good." Iustead of being affected by the tendencies of his times, he changed those tendencies. He burst like a cyclone upon the seats and emblems of idolatry and laid them low. He commanded ery of Ramoth Gilead, and this, too, in Israel to seek the Lord. He showed his spite of the warning of a true prophet. sincerity by detbroning his own mother and burning the idol and grove she had established. He began this blessed work of reformation at his very accession. The goodness of Asa was not of the negative kind. He was no contemplative recluse, but a forceful and aggressive man, and according to current standards, by which alone he can be fairly judged, he was preeminently correct.

He was not content with the mora reformation of his kingdom, he looked well to its military defenses, building for-tress cities and mobilizing an army of up-wards of half a million of well-armed and drilled men.

like vulgarity it must vote the Plantag Asa's piety and prudence ought to have of his shame was that it was so unneces been better rewarded. But hardly had sary. JEHOSHAPHAT'S REFORM.

In that dim past, when Homer was sing-ing the Iliad in Greek cities, Jehoshaphat started an educational embassy through the kingdom of Judah. This commission of princes, priests, and Levites is unique. Its methods were an advance upon those of the poet. It carried with it, and left be-hind it, a written literature. "They had the book of the law of the Lord with them, and went about throughout all the cities of Judah and taught them." This is said to have been the germ of the synagogue, an institution which played so large a part in institution which played so large a part in later Hebrew history. This first recorded systematic measure of public instruction, partly accounts for the prosperity and strength of the kingdom. This was one of the means by which "the Lord established the kingdom." It was a peripatetic and popular seminary. In addition to this pedagogic means, the king placed his coun-try in the most thorough state of military try in the most thorough state of military defense. He garrisoned the fortified cities, created military posts, and forme. I the first standing army of which there is record. A final measure was the thorough organization of public justice. But in all this the personal character of the ruler can not be ignored. His was an elevated spirit. "His heart was lifted up in the ways of the Lord." He was unaffected by the current spirit of idolism. "He sought the Lord, and walked in his commandments." He wielded the exemplary power of his high position to the uttermost. This was the man, these were the means, by which a genuine and substantial prosperity was brought to the kingdom. No wonder then that in Hebrew epic Jehoshaphat's name is linked to Heze-kiah's like Lincoln's to Washington's. He is eminent among those who have ruled their fellows. But there is a blot on his otherwise bright escutcheon. It is the mar-riage of state which he effected between his son and the daughter of Jezebel. By this means he sought to make Jezebel's husband Ahab, king of Israel, his ally. Soon Ahab had Jehoshaphat involved with him in a war against Syria for the recovspite of the warning of a true prophet. Our version makes a tame statement when it says "the king returned to his house in peace." What the original says is that he got home whole, and that by a narrow margin ; by the skin of his teeth and nothing to spare. There were two kings on that field of battle, one was taken and the other left. For a while it looked as if both would be taken. The crafty

Abab had induced Jehoshaphat to wear his royal insignia, while he himself went incognito. The Syrians naturally took the king of Judah for the king of Israel and were about to kill him when diverted by some exigency of battle. The emotions of the king on his home-ure would be a happy duke and an Australian sun-downer, neither desiring to be anything better. If the Spectator doesn't Humanly speaking, it would seem that coming may be imagined. The poignancy

A Timely Word.

The weaker the system, the more enervating the heat and the greater the danger of prostration. This is a truism— a proposition needing words. "It is." according to the Spectator "a disease of character producing different symptoms according to the moral consti no argument. A word in favor of the systemic effects of Hood's Sarsaparilla is timely—it is a fact that this peculiar medicine strengthens tution upon which it fastens, and the social environment of the sufferer. It may make a man overbearing, or it may make him obsequious, insolent or flatter and tones all the organs and functions and builds up the whole system.
