

EX-GOVERNOR PATTISON DEAD.

Pennsylvania's Greatest and Most Respected Citizen Passes Away at His Home in Overbrook. Men of all Creeds and Parties Mourn the Memory and Pay Tribute to His Worth and Integrity, as a Citizen, as an Official and as a Democratic Leader.

Robert Emory Pattison, twice Governor of Pennsylvania, and the only Pennsylvanian of recent years seriously considered as a presidential possibility, died at 6:25 o'clock on Monday morning at his home in Overbrook, Philadelphia. His end was peaceful, the distinguished patient after a series of relapses during the evening slowly sinking from unconsciousness to the end. At the bedside when death came were Mrs. Ezra Bartlett, a sister, Robert E. Pattison, Jr., Dr. Pfromm and Boening and two nurses. Tired out by the all-night vigil, Mrs. Pattison and her daughter Miss Lavina Pattison, had gone to their own room a short time previous. Before they could be summoned the husband and father had closed his eyes in the last sleep.

Death was due to pneumonia complicated with a weak heart and a broken down physique. Governor Pattison's friends believe his end was hastened by the strain of his work at the last Democratic National Convention. He took a leading part in the deliberations of that body and did yeoman service in bringing about a compromise platform. The ex-Governor had been in noticeable failing health for some time prior to his journey to St. Louis, and he returned from his arduous labors there in a state bordering on physical collapse.

HEAT HASTENED CRISIS. On Monday of last week he was seized with a congestive chill, and took to his bed. Pneumonia developed, and although Doctors Pfromm and Boening labored ardently to save his life he slowly grew weaker. Hope was not abandoned until Sunday, when the intense heat of the day hastened the final crisis.

Sinking spells followed by rallies succeeded each other, but each left the patient noticeably weaker. Oxygen was administered to sustain life. During the night the ex-Governor had intervals of consciousness, during which he chatted with those at his bedside. At other times he was slightly delirious.

Just before the end came he seemed much stronger and asked his son for a glass of water. He raised the glass to his lips, drank, and seemed much refreshed. Then he sank back on his pillow, closed his eyes, and slowly the heart-beats grew fainter and less frequent.

To the Democracy of the country at large and to officials and distinguished men of Pennsylvania the death of ex-Governor Pattison came as a severe shock. No man in the State was closer to the people, especially those of the great rural districts. Outside of the State the ex-Governor was regarded as one of the foremost men of the Democratic party, and one who not only done great things, but had perhaps higher honors ahead of him.

Of all the tributes to the dead man none were more sincere than those which came from the distinguished leaders in the Methodist church. Governor Pattison was the son of a Methodist clergyman, and he himself was an intensely religious man and one of the leaders in upholding the Methodist faith. For many years he conducted a Bible class in the church of the Covenant, at Eighteenth and Spruce streets.

HIS CHURCH LABORS. James M. King, secretary of the Board of Church Extension, speaking for that body, told of the ex-Governor's devoted labors, and said: "While in political life, and necessarily in intimate association with politicians and public men, he was a most pronounced and outspoken Christian man in his religious faith. While Governor of the State he did not think it beneath him to address Sunday schools and religious organizations and spoke from platforms and pulpits to aid churches on their anniversary occasions and in raising money for building or other purposes."

"I am grateful to say that I was permitted to share in a personal and close friendship with this good man. He was always a Christian gentleman and never thought his time too precious to give a portion of it to the humblest pleas for various purposes which came from the humblest people."

As Valedictorian of his class in 1870, upon the advice of President Riche, of the High school, Mr. Pattison took up the study of law in the office of the late Lewis C. Cassidy, after declining a scholarship to Dickinson College, and was admitted to the bar in 1872. When the Democratic party wanted a candidate for City Controller he was induced by Mr. Cassidy to accept the nomination and was elected with a majority of 1962. During his first term in the office he introduced a policy in city finances of "pay as you go" and was instrumental in floating a funded debt loan to pay an outstanding debt of the city aggregating about $10,000,000. Mr. Pattison was re-elected in 1881, but had served only a year of his second term when he was sought by his party as a candidate for Governor. Some feared that he was too young for the place, being only 31 years of age, but his record as a public speaker and his success in the office of City Controller were regarded as guarantee of his ability to win if anyone could.

He was elected with a plurality of 40,202. In 1887 he was elected president of the Chestnut street National bank and served in that capacity for four years, until he was again called upon by his party to stand for the Governorship. In 1890 he was elected in the memorable campaign of Geo. W. Delamater, the Republican candidate. At the last convention at which Grover Cleveland was nominated for the Presidency, the Pennsylvania delegation was instructed to vote as a unit. At one stage of the contest New York offered to cast its seventy votes for ex-Governor Pattison if Pennsylvania would also support him. Pennsylvania having committed itself to Cleveland, refused to do this. It was generally thought later that had Cleveland not been chosen on the first ballot, as he was, the Pennsylvania delegation might have swerved from him and turned the tide towards Pattison.

TALKED FOR PRESIDENT. In 1896 and again in 1900 Mr. Pattison was Pennsylvania's choice for the Presidential nomination of his party. Again last month, in St. Louis, his partisans were active. Despite his known opinions, Bryan made an earnest effort to obtain his consent to run against Judge Parker, but the former Governor refused to desert the popular candidate, and insisted that his name be not presented. Nevertheless, four delegates voted for him.

In the fall of 1902 Mr. Pattison was again nominated for Governor. It was believed that the Republican party had split so thoroughly over the administration of Governor Stone and the nomination of Judge Pennypacker over John P. Elkin that the Democrats could win. Then followed one of the fiercest campaigns ever waged in the State, but Pattison was defeated.

ACTIVE AT ST. LOUIS. At the Democratic convention, at St. Louis, Mr. Pattison was one of the most conspicuous and influential delegates in attendance. He served on the committee on Resolutions and during the long and arduous session of that committee, lasting from eight o'clock in the evening until nine o'clock of the next day, broken as he was in health, struggled for a harmonious platform shortly after returning home the illness which resulted in death began.

Married in the year of his admission to the bar to Miss Anna E. Smith, daughter of a Philadelphia, he secured a devoted wife and accomplished companion. Their surviving children are Lavina Russell Pattison and Robert Emory Pattison.

One of the charges of Rev. Robert H. Pattison, the ex-Governor's father, was the church of the Covenant, at Eighteenth street, below Spruce. He had run down greatly when Governor Pattison and the late John Field determined to bring about a revival of its power. Through their generous giving they made it possible to build a beautiful edifice on the site of the old church and through their efforts it has become one of the greatest religious centres of the city. A feature of the Sunday school is the Bible class, of which the ex-Governor was the instructor. Every Sunday morning he taught the international lesson to nearly 400 men and women.

He was a lay delegate to the General Conference in 1884 and 1888, and in 1890 he was a fraternal delegate to the General Conference of the Methodist Episcopal church, South, and in 1891 a delegate to the Ecumenical Council, held in Washington, D. C. Dickinson College, his father's alma mater, in 1894 conferred upon him the degree of Doctor of Laws and the same degree was conferred upon him by the University of Pennsylvania ten years later. Mr. Pattison was also actively identified with the general business interests of Philadelphia, having been for many years a leading member of the Board of Directors of the Trades' League. He was also connected with other business organizations of the city. He was a member of Olive Branch Lodge 115, I. O. F.

HIS LIFE SKETCH. Robert Emory Pattison was born at Quantico, Somerset county, Maryland, on December 24th, 1850. He was a son of a Methodist clergyman, Rev. Robert H. Pattison, D. D., and of Catharine Priscilla Woodford. At the age of six years he was brought to Philadelphia, his father having been assigned to the pastorate of the Asbury M. E. church, in West Philadelphia.
