FARM NOTES.

-Farmers who receive circulars containing offers of preservatives of milk and cream, or of methods for doubling the amount of butter from the milk, should consider such propositions very carefully. Batter is made from the oream only, and the proportion of butter obtained depends upon the amount of butter fat in the milk -the fat being in the cream. It is impossible to get something for nothing, and any product devised by the use of special agents is simply not butter, but coagulated milk, the price of which in market will be less than that of pure milk.

-To feed a variety of food does not require the farmer to make a complete change from certain kinds to others, but to avoid confining the stock to one or two kinds only. Corn and hay are excellent foods and need not be discontinued, but cut roots, silage, cooked potatoes or turnips, or even need not be discontinued, but cut roots, silage, cooked potatoes or turnips, or even a mess of scalded cut clover, will be readily accepted, while brau or ground oats may be given regularly. The rule should be to observe the animal, and when it refuses any particular food tempt it to eat with some other kind.

-If sweet corn is grown it will be a good plan to save a few of the earliest and best ears for seed. By careful selection every year the corn will be earlier each succeeding spring, and if quality, size and plump-ness of grain are also considered, great improvement in the sweet corn can be made.

-It is claimed that 2 per cent. of a horse's weight of good nourishing food is all that he should be fed a day. By this rule a horse weighing 1500 pounds should receive 30 pounds of food, but it must be considered that something depends upon the amount of labor performed, as well as the digestive capacity and appetite of the animal

-No animal can remain at a stand-still without loss to its owner. If an animal is not gaining, then the food and labor are thrown away. If an animal loses only a pound in weight, then the farmer not only suffers a loss of that which he once had, but must incur additional expense to regain that one pound; but the time lost cannot be recovered. These facts show the importance of keeping the stock in good con-dition, and having each animal make an increase daily. When there is a falling off in the weight or the yield of milk is re-duced the cause should be sought, and if an error has occurred, or there is fault in the management, a change should be made for the better without delay.

--- No one who produces a superior article is compelled to search for a market if his products become known. The market always seeks the best, and invites it, but inferior goods must search for a market, and frequently such effort is fruitless. Quality fixes the price, and even when the market is well supplied there is always more room for the best.

-The garden plot for strawberries should be plowed or spaded this fall, left rough and well covered with fine manure. The frost will further pulverize the manure, and in the spring the ground should be spaded again and the rake used to get it in a fine condition, the plants being set out in April, if possible. With this treatment a little below the elbows, where they were a plot of one-eighth of an acre of ground in strawberries will produce sufficient for pen and extending five inches beyond the

FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN.

Braid and buttons, buttons and braid these will be the keynote of the trimminge, used on tailor-made and street costume, for the coming antumn and winter seasons and the braids will match the goods. Some of these braids show threads of another color. Capucine or nasturtium and brown are to be very smart. Indeed, all shades of yellow and burnt orange— coq de roche—will be in evidence. The wide straight braids in three-inch widths are being largely used on silks as well as clothes.

Marble Cake.-Cream a cup of butter with two eups of powdered sugar, add five beaten eggs, a cup of milk and three cups of prepared flour. Keep out four table-spoonfuls of the batter. Color this with a half cake of varille checulate half cake of vanilla chocolate wet with a little cold milk. Put into a cake tin a third of the white cake batter; drop upon this several spoonfuls of the brown mixture, is full, bake.

The stock of fancy now always runs to the turnover effect verging onto that style of the flat linen collar. The most generally worn now is a stock which has embroidered eyelets in front through which a soft silk tie is laced, and tied. And fashion favors red ties with costumes of white linen. Red polka-dotted veils have superseded those of green. And red silk stockings with white canvas low-cuts are considered smart. Death to the lingerie hat is the knellnow. Floppy hats were done to death early in the summer.

The popularity of the tiny checked taf-fetas and the black and white checked voile shows no sign of waning; most becoming dresses are made of these materials, with pipings of colored silk introduced on the coreage and skirt. The simple tailor-made coat and skirt is worn by many smart women, and made in coarse linen or canvas it is decidedly chic. A charming idea noticeable in one or two pretty skirts, remarkable for their simplicity and their smartness, is in the manner of decoration. Broad bands or tucks of white taffetas arranged in graduating circular rows are appliqued half-way up the fullness from the base of the skirt, while a high-draped taffeta waistband, finished in front with strass buttons and small bows of silk, complete the effect.

Miss Alice Roosevelt was lunching one day in town with her aunt, Mrs. Cowles. It was a rainy day, and Miss Roosevelt wore a blue serge costume, having an instep length skirt of that style of plaiting for which no name seems as yet to have been found, the material being laid in accordion plaits and pressed so firmly that after the cloth is pulled almost straight it shows the plaits and hangs in folds. The Eton coat was short enough in the centre back to show a little of the simple white, underblouse, and also swung out a bit. Two bands of blue braid went around it. Short, wide revers, made to either close or fold back, were lined with white. Over each shoulder extended a wide band, end-ing in tabs, and three dull silver buttons crossed the end of the tabs at both the front and the back. The sleeves were a little below the elbows, where they were

To mulch the soil is to cover it. This is done by using straw, leaves, or any other suitable material, according to; circumstances, in many cases stable manure being employed. Mulching prevents rapid evap-oration of moisture and protect young plants against the direct action of the sun in dry seasons. But, while benefits may accrue from the use of a mulch, there are also some disadvantages to be considered. The use of unfermented manure, or matter that is subject to decay, encourages mildew and fungus growth, as well as serving to protect insects and parasites. Yet there are some plants that thrive best when afforded a covering, and such protection should be given. One of the methods of mulching is to cover the entire plant, removing the covering early in the spring. The object of a mulch in winter, however, is not to keep out the cold from the plants. as no amount of covering can effect such object. What is desired is to prevent sudden freezing and thawing of the soil, which upheaves the plants and causes injury. A mulch is considered highly beneficial when applied around the roots of the plants, allowing the plants to receive all the air and light possible, and can be used both winter and summer.

It is too late to depend upon millet as a crop, but if a piece of land infested with was a mass of ruffles. If one did not count crop, but if a piece of land infested with weeds is now sown to the ordinary Hun-garian grass or common millet the result will be that the millet will kill out all other plants. One of the advantages of millet when it is sown at this season is that it provides excellent green food or pasturage for all kinds of stock after grass becomes scarce. As it grows rapidly it keeps up as almost unlimited supply. One of the uses of late green food is that the animals are provided for at a sea-ruffles were used from the girdle to the that the animals are provided for at a sea-son when they have difficulties in securing a plentiful supply of grass, and the green food is valuable as much for its aid in pro-metine direction and characteristic and the security graduated and each overlapped the one below it. The silk used for all this rufmoting digestion and supplying a variety as in its value as a portion of the ration. It is a rule of farmers to depend upon the pasture as much as possible, but after a cobweb upon which the sun shone, the dry summer some pastures become exhausted and are also injured by being too closely cropped. As the broadcasting of a field with Hungarian grass costs but little, and the growth is rapid, there is no crop that can be seeded down in August that will give better results as green food until frost.

The mowing of the meadow for hay de-prives the soil of the elements of fertility, and the same occurs when the cattle are soils less easily and cleanses better, two allowed to graze on it. Every pound of meat and milk sent to market carries in its composition the riche- of the meadow, and, good; the short skirt is laid in deep tucks meadow must be plowed and seeded down. the only decoration. in order to change the variety of food pro-duced by it. It then fails to produce saf-ficient green food and it yields sparingly of hay.

Good roads will be appreciated in the winter. At this season all may be well, but in winter, when the roads are muddy, the time lost in hauling but a few loads will be much greater in value than the amount of taxes necessary to make good on with shirred ribbons and falling over roads.

continuing section of the sleeve, which latter was cut down narrow and formed a cuff down to the wrists, the back seam of these ouff section showing three or four of the metal buttons. Drooping from the out section of the sleeve were puffs formed of the full sleeves of the white underblouse. Three buttons were placed in a line from the elbow out to the edge outlining the slash in the coat sleeve. Her white mull blouse had a wide, turneddown embroidered collar and a small, stiff bow of blue velvet, the bow and ends of equal length and of the stiff style; in the center of the bow was a small buckle. Topping this costume was a rather flat hat of rough, dull blue straw trimmed with a wreath of bluets in different shades of purplish blue. It had a wide brim that rolled up a little at the left side. Her gloves were white. She wore tapering-toed tax Oxfords and plain tan hose.

Two dresses worn with the fashionable poke bonnets were distinctly noteworthy, each as quaint as the bonnet that crowned the picture. One was of white mousseline, sprigged with mauve. It was made with a very full skirt, which was gathered into two broad lace insertions, the material be-ing cut away from beneath. There was a lace yoke and lace undersleeves, and the most graceful old-fichu. The other dress fling was nacre taffeta, you know, the ex-quisite mother of pearl shadings. It was as if a white silk had been placed behind a silk catching up the thousand and one irridescent reflections. Along the border of each ruffle was worked any number of tinyFrench knots in the pastel rainbow colorings.

White mohair is much used this summer for yachting suits and has many redeeming features over other materials. It very important items.

The design of this one is particularly composition the riche: of the meadow, and, though the process may be a slow one, yet a time is sure to come when the grass will be less nutritious and the growth less rapid. Then will the cattle use only that which is the most succulent and nourishing, leaving and vest of blouse are bordered with revers the more undesirable grasses to take pos-session, along with weeds, until finally the and three tucks on each side of revers are
