The Tumultuous Life of Japan's Great Soldier

As vivid pen picture of the commander-in-chief of the armies of Japan in Manchuria is presented by Will Livingston Comfort...

"An English correspondent in Tokio during the early days of the war strolled into the billiard room of the Imperial hotel one afternoon and announced that he had just secured an interview with Field Marshal Oyama.

"How did you like him?" was asked. "He is the ugliest and most charming man in the empire," the correspondent replied quickly.

The writer of this article was presented to Marquis Oyama a few days later in company with several foreigners at the Maple Club, Tokio, and the remark of the English correspondent came back forcibly. The first impression was that of repulsion. Oyama is short, squat and long-armed. His huge head seems to rest upon heavy shoulders, without a connecting medium, and this peculiarity is intensified as the marquis turns his body as well as his head or his wishes to look at an object behind or at his side.

THE FACE THAT FASCINATES.

"The physical peculiarities, however, are nothing. It is the face of Oyama which first repels, then fascinates. It was the same with Robespierre, the same with Talleyrand. The play of the brain was needed to wipe out the ghastliness and gloom. His skin seemed to be drawn by the fires of suffering. Smallpox had left it one mass of fiery pits. I thought of the Connelville camp and the square miles of oaks ovens—inverted. Other scars, intermingled—steel and frost perhaps—and from out the serried countenance shone the restless black eyes, piercing but crooked.

"His voice is deep and gentle, and his speech is studded with unexpected bursts of humor or intensity. This facility in Western, as opposed to the stereotyped nothings which are continually upon the lips of the Japanese. He speaks English well, but French better. Back of the gentle voice and the reaction of fascination which comes after a few moments in the presence of this great soldier of the Orient there is something restless, mysterious. You feel the iron force of the man, a force inexorable, Napoleonic.

A TUMULTUOUS LIFE.

"There is much of violence in his history, and this helps in the forming of these unusual impressions. As a child, almost, he took part in the interprovincial strife, and but a few years later he stood for the government and helped to put down the bitter Satsuma rebellion. His part was the triumph of conviction and sentiment. Many of his relatives were against the Emperor in this warfare. Young Oyama first fought his leaning toward the Satsuma cause and then fought for the central government, which prevailed.

"He commanded the Second Army Corps in the war against China and was chief in the first taking of Port Arthur. It is far from unreasonable to hint that Oyama will be powerfully in evidence at the second fall of this fortress, which is so identified with the hopes and honor of Japan. Until the present month the first taking of Port Arthur was his greatest achievement. But now Langyang is added, and the initial campaign of the war is not yet finished.

"As a youth in the early twenties he was sent to France as a military attaché. He studied the organization of modern armies and watched the titanic struggle between the French and Germans in 1870. His lessons were well learned and he was appointed to the rank of general when he returned to the empire. His rise has been rapid. He became War Minister, Minister of Education, First Lord of the Admiralty and Field Marshal. The Emperor honored him first as count and then as marquis. Besides he was a long time chief of staff to Yamagata.

A TRAGIC LOVE TALE.

"All these things were well known to the company of foreigners who were presented to the Marquis, but they were not thought of by many who glanced for the first time upon this battered and beloved soldier of the empire. The story, so old that its truth is mingled with tradition now, but so vital that it will last as long as Oyama and Japan, was remembered. It was of his return from the Satsuma rebellion that all were thinking as we looked upon the un-couth head, the hunched figure and the thick, hard hands and arms. Tales had reached him while at the front of the indorsements of his bride. She disregarded the customs of her caste and old Japan took it as a personal affront.

"But Oyama did not leave his war. He spoke no word nor made any sign that he believed or even knew. The criticism of his fellow-soldiers was directed upon him when the campaign brought him close to home and he did not seize the chance to wipe out his dishonor. When the war finished, however, he lost no time. The woman met him at the door, the story runs, and bowed to him as if he were her lord. Oyama had her rise and entered the house. And that was all of the wife of Oyama's youth.

"That is why the eyes of one who has heard the tale dart instinctively to the hands of this soldier at the first meeting. "Russia was pleased when the report was sent out from Japan that Oyama had been made commander-in-chief of the Japanese forces. St. Petersburg, accustomed to internal envy and enmity which is eating at the heart of its army and navy, expected to profit by a similar condition arising from Oyama's appointment. It was believed that Kuroki would resent the trend of affairs and hamper his chief, as Alexieff had hampered Kuropatkin, to the detriment of the Russian cause. But Japan is different."—North American

Stories by the Clergy.

A clerical friend, says a writer in the Brooklyn Eagle, tells this story about a grandchild of the late Bishop Brooks: Her mother, having occasion to be away one evening, left the tiny girl in charge of a nurse, telling her to be a good child, to obey the nurse and to say her prayers before going to bed. The next morning the mother asked her if she had remembered these injunctions.

"Oh, yes, mamma," said the prim little tot; "I was a good girl, an' I obeyed nurse."

"Did you say your prayers?" the mother asked.

"Well," she hesitated. "I didn't edzoatly say 'em, mamma. I was so dreaftled tired an' seepy I drest tumbled into bed an' said: 'Dod, won't you please excuse me from sayin' my pray'ers to-night?' an' dod said 'W'y, certainly, Miss B'ooks, w'y please-ure."

Appalling Luxury at Skibo.

Mr. and Mrs. Andrew Carnegie are now at Skibo Castle, where they have been entertaining many friends. Their hospitality is of the most lavish sort. Said a recent visitor to Skibo: "In every room there is a placard near the electric bell requesting the guests not to tip the servants. In fact, if one gave a shilling to every employe on the Skibo estate one would find one's purse depleted. There are ten servants for every guest, and the gardeners who care for the green terraces number at least a couple of walves. Eight footmen stand in the dining room every night and do nothing except pour champagne. There are common butlers to wait at table. Each guest is provided with an individual servant, valets for men guests and maids for women. Every guest chamber is provided with a dressing room and bath. The baths, sunk in into the floor, are most luxurious affairs.

Over this remarkable establishment one light haired woman presides as housekeeper. She has two assistants, and they in turn have their underlings, who devote their time to the inspection of the kitchen and the bed rooms and engage and discharge servants. Andrew Carnegie's establishment is Paradise for his servants. The same is true of his Fifth avenue home. His servants are engaged at a yearly salary, and should they remain longer than a year their pay is increased every year until the fifth. When an employe has remained with the Carnegies for five years he or she is entitled to an annual pension in case of incapacitation from work. It is said that the Carnegies have more domestic servants than any other family outside of royalty.

Why the Japanese Hazard Such Loss of Life.

The reckless onslaught upon seemingly impregnable positions by the Japanese is explained by "The New York Times" in a statement which we condense. The possible coming of the Baltic fleet makes imperative an immediate capture of Port Arthur, and an equally decisive campaign against General Kuropatkin. At this time the Japanese are numerically stronger, than the Russians wherever they are in contact, hence when the Japanese inflict a loss as great as that which they sustain their relative position for the time being is improved, for the Russians cannot overcome the superiority of the Japanese in numbers until they bring many thousands of men from Russia. Only by reaching decisive victories at an early day can Japan hope to escape from an overwhelming final disaster, for the heavy drain on the resources of Japan is already telling. She has only limited reserves of men and money and no reserves of ships, while Russia's resources are inexhaustible. The man of the whole is "The Russian can afford to meet defeat for a time; the Japanese must secure supreme victory soon or not at all."

Union County's Big Fair.

The Fifty-first annual fair to be held at Brook Park, Lewisburg, Sept. 28th, 29th and 30th, will be one of the most attractive from every standpoint that has ever been held by the association. The premium list will be away ahead of any other fair in this section, and the racing track will have some of the fastest trotters and pacing horses that have ever been seen hereabouts. The management has been most liberal this year and the inducements they make will bring the exhibits away ahead of other years. Special features have been secured at great expense, in order to make the days a continual enjoyment for both old and young.

The track is rounding into first-class condition and all the buildings, etc., have been repaired and made attractive. Every day will be a big day. Excursion trains will be run on all roads, giving very low rate to visitors: Big special premiums will be offered for displays by organizations in or outside of the county, while the list in general has been increased.

—Most people overestimate their pulse, as they often count its beats when talking about the matter, and it is a fact well known to physicians that the excitement of conversation will quicken the pulse from five to twenty beats. The best time to arrive at the true normal is shortly after waking in the morning, when the nerves are unexcited.

During the course of a heated debate in the house of representatives sharp words were exchanged between a congressman from New York and one from Mississippi. A challenge was delivered and accepted, and as both were courageous and determined a bloody meeting seemed imminent. Friends interposed, but in vain. Both men were resolute, and neither would yield to the suggestion of an amicable arrangement. As a last resort Senator Lamar was called in to save the situation. He realized that no ordinary methods would serve his purpose, and so resorted to strategy. The principals in the proposed duel are still living, so I will call the New Yorker Jones and the Mississippian Smith.

Senator Lamar called on the New Yorker, and after the usual civilities had been exchanged he said:

"Jones, I've come here to do you a friendly turn. I know that you and Smith are determined to fight and that nothing will stop you. I have not come as a mediator, but simply to mitigate, if possible, the horrors of a fatal end, so far as you are concerned. As to Smith, I have no fears. He is a dead shot and can take care of himself, but he is not an unfeeling man, and is inclined to respect any partiality you may have in favor of any particular part of your anatomy. Some men entertain a mortal dread of being disfigured after death, and if the choice were left them would prefer not to be wounded in the eye or mouth or cheek bone. Now, if there is any particular spot that you would like to have Smith's bullet enter he has commissioned me to say that your wishes will be respected."

This extraordinary proposition staggered the New Yorker. Even his undoubted courage did not stand so severe a test, and he paled visibly. After he recovered his composure he replied that he would confer with his second, and Mr. Lamar, after an impressive farewell, took his leave.

The tip was given to friends of the principals and new negotiations entered upon. The duel did not come off. Lamar's device had succeeded.—New Orleans Times-Democrat.

Time for Scotland.

"Speaking of clocks," said the traveler, "Edinburgh, Scotland, has the most interesting time marking device I ever saw. The city lies between two hills. On one of these, known as Carlton hill, there is an observatory tower, in the top of which a large black ball is suspended. Across the valley, probably a mile away, is Castle hill, surmounted by the historic Edinburgh castle. One of the large guns in this fortress, pointing toward Carlton hill, is electrically connected with the ball in the tower a mile away. Every evening at 6 o'clock the gun is fired, and at the same moment the ball falls. The device sets the official time for all Scotland.

"It is interesting to stand on Carlton hill at the appointed hour to see the simultaneous flash of the gun on Castle hill, and the fall of the ball close at hand, while the roar of the gun is of course some moments in crossing the valley. On the other hand, it is equally interesting to stand beside the castle at dusk to watch the ball at Carlton hill fall just as the shot is fired. I recall once standing in the courtyard of the castle, watch in hand, waiting for the cannon just overhead to be fired. It occurred to me it would be more exciting to watch the crowds of passing people, especially since not one was apparently thinking of the shot from the cannon. When the roar took place, absolutely without warning, hardly a yard above the heads of the crowd, the scene well repaid my waiting. Everybody dodged. Children screamed, and men and women jumped to the side of the wall. Of course it was all over in a second, but in that moment it seemed that an electric shock had passed through the crowd."

Malice and Superstition.

In the middle ages malice and superstition found expression in the formation of wax images of hated persons, into the bodies of which long pins were stuck. It was confidently believed that in that way deadly injury would be done to the person represented. This belief and practice continued down to the seventeenth century. The superstition indeed still holds its place in the highlands of Scotland, "where," says a well informed writer, "within the last few years a clay model of an enemy was found in a stream, having been placed there in the belief that as the clay washed away so would the health of the hated one decline."

The Wholesome Girl.

People may laugh at the idea of platonic friendship, but there never was a time when the comradeship between men and girls was so healthy and natural as at the present day. Men used to expect no companionship intellectually and least of all in their sports. But the modern girl meets a man in a charmingly frank fashion. There is something very fresh and healthy and sincere about her. There can be no morbid sentimentality in a girl who plays golf instead of reading French novels. Neither does a girl who is fond of athletics and outdoor life necessarily grow masculine. She joins the men in canoeing, wheeling or sailing, and so great is her proficiency in these sports that she is no hindrance, but rather a great addition to their pleasure. Men and girls meet on common ground, and in the freshness and healthfulness of the great outdoors they have the nicest sort of comradeship and form firm friendships.

Since they know men better in this natural sort of way girls are less apt to rush into early marriages after seeing a man half a dozen times in society.—New Idea Magazine.

Sent Back for the Purse.

Picking up a wornout, empty pocketbook, a salesman in one of the large dry goods stores the other day thought he would have a little fun with it. He therefore placed it on the counter, half concealed by the goods lying on it. Presently a shopper entered. Her eyes lighted on the wallet as by instinct, and while pricing half a score of articles she endeavored to cover it—quite artlessly, of course—with her handkerchief, then with her satchel and again with her umbrella. The salesman, without appearing to notice her actions, each time removed the pocketbook out of danger and into light. Finally she adopted new tactics and picked it up, with the remark:

"Yes?" replied the clerk interrogatively. "Thank you." And he took the leather and disappeared with it for a moment. Upon his return the woman asked, with a slight show of interest:

"Was there much in it?"

"Only $3," replied the salesman carelessly, with the ease of one who has been used to lying all his life.

"And who will get it if it isn't called for?" asked the shopper.

"The firm," is the epigrammatical response.

The woman went out. In ten or fifteen minutes a boy came in and asked:

"Was a pocketbook with $3 found here this morning?"

"Yes," replied the salesman, "but it has been called for."

"Oh," said the boy and retired.

And the salesman smiled audibly.—Chicago Tribune.

Trees and Wind.

When one travels through the parts of Belgium bordering on the sea he sees a striking example of the influence on trees of strong and constant winds. The trees are in general bent toward the interior of the country. It was proved some time ago that the trunks of trees hauled in the peat bogs of Holland all lie in a southwest to northeast direction.

F. Potts Green says if you are running along on a worn out system, with nerves tired and energy gone, you're "hipping the horse that pulls you. Why not get the best of life? Why let a dollar stand between you and the enjoyment of perfect health? Come in and get a bottle of Vin-ta-na. Let it put you on your feet. I do not ask you to run any risk, and your money will be returned to you if you are not satisfied with results.

Nothing spoils a good disposition. Nothing tests a man's patience. Like any itchiness of the skin. Itching Piles almost drive you crazy. All day it makes you miserable. All night it keeps you awake. Itch! Itch! Itch! with no relief. You would do so but you know it makes it worse. Such miseries are daily decreasing. Druggists are learning they can be cured. Learning the merit of Doan's Ointment.

Pleasly of Proof that Doan's Ointment will cure Piles, Eczema or any itchiness of the skin. Read the testimony of a Bellefonte citizen.

W. L. Duggest, proprietor of the Bush house, Bellefonte, says: "I have used Doan's Ointment and know it to be all that it is claimed to be. I tried it for itching hemorrhoids and other skin eruptions and found it to be not only one of the best, but in fact the only remedy that ever gave me any relief. I was in constant torment for years with hemorrhoids and anything which I suffered from this trouble will know how welcome was the relief I found in Doan's Ointment. It cured me in about twenty-four hours. I have not only used it myself but have recommended it in numerous cases and always with the same good results. I would not allow my name to be used as a reference if I did not know it to be just as represented. I got the Ointment at F. Potts Green's drug store.
