WHAT IS LIFE?—In the last analysis nobody knows, but we do know that it is under strict law. Abuse that law even slightly, pain results. Irregular living means derangement of the organs, resulting in Constipation, Headache or Liver trouble.

because it was beyond the prophet's jurisdiction. He could only say that, in the hour and article of his translation, now so imminent, Elisha could with eye of seer penetrate to and behold his entrance to the spirit world, then he would be of such character as to receive the same Spirit that had illuminated Elijah himself.

Not studied phrase could have been so appropriate as Elisha's unpremeditated ascription to the ascending prophet. The chariot with its horsemen was the most formidable part of an Oriental army, corresponding to artillery in modern times. The very weight of the machine, its wheels armed with hooked blades, the archer standing within it like a tower of brass, the horses driven four or six abreast. Nothing could stand before such a terrible engine. So when an army lost a chariot, it was a real calamity. It was irreparable, and the force was correspondingly weakened.

But in spite of this contrast, it is worthy of note that his epithet is identical with that of the Tishbite. When Josiah, the king of Israel, came down to visit the dying prophet in the touching language of the narrative, he wept over his face, and cried, "O, my father, my father, thou chariot of Israel and horseman thereof!"

Education was one of the silent but mighty forces in the reformation of Israel now in progress. There were several well-attended theological seminaries in existence. It is well said that Elijah's last duty (the dividing of Jordan) was a test of his spiritual strength. He was to build for himself, by an act of faith, the path to his glorious end, and so impress indelibly upon the hearts of his followers that no other way than faith in God's promises leads to the inheritance of light.

Now follows a loose collection of acts covering twelve chapters. They are the credentials of Elisha's prophetic calling. Some tradition of them was probably preserved in the schools of the prophets, later committed to writing, and finally incorporated in the Book of Kings. They are evidently fragmentary, unchronological, and pieced.

Two pictorial incidents are recorded on the threshold of Elisha's prophetic career. Whether they are idealized or literal is of comparatively small moment, but that the same Spirit that operated in Elijah may work in him also, and twice as powerfully as in any other son of the prophets. The thing asked was "hard,"

Elisha proved the legitimacy of the latter's success-ship, and indicated that he was to have his way through the stream of events then transpiring. No wonder it was said, "The Spirit of Elijah doth rest upon Elisha." He was at once saluted as the translated prophet.

The sweetening of the spring at Jericho indicates the effect of Elisha's ministry. He was to heal his nation and his times. His was to be a saline and quieting influence in the bitter and turbulent stream of individual and collective life. The women of Shunem spoke of him as the "holy man of God, which passeth by us continually." For sixty years he continued faithfully to discharge the duties of his high office.

Elijah was the "chariot" of Israel. Good men in high office are worth more than a park of artillery. Good men in or out of office are the real standing army of the nation.

Elijah was as different from Elisha as Mount Sinai from the Mount of Beatitudes. Eight out of nine of Elisha's reputed miracles are beneficent. The exception proves the rule.

The young men of Bethel failed to apprehend this truth. They thought Elisha no prophet, because he did not look and act like Elijah; because, in fact, he wore his hair shaven. Paul asserts that while there are diversities, the Spirit may be the same.

It is well said that Elijah's last duty (the dividing of Jordan) was a test of his spiritual strength. He was to build for himself, by an act of faith, the path to his glorious end, and so impress indelibly upon the hearts of his followers that no other way than faith in God's promises leads to the inheritance of light.

Now follows a loose collection of acts covering twelve chapters. They are the credentials of Elisha's prophetic calling. Some tradition of them was probably preserved in the schools of the prophets, later committed to writing, and finally incorporated in the Book of Kings. They are evidently fragmentary, unchronological, and pieced.

"Never to change"—that is the conceit of a little mind. Elisha said, "No," to his doubting scholars when they insisted that the search should be made for the body of Elijah. But he put himself aside, "Yes," when he realized that if the concession was not made to their weakness they would probably always harbor a doubt of the translation of Elijah. Matthew says well, "That saying 'Yes' after having said 'No' at first, is one of the finest things."

There is an Eastern story of a mythical fountain, each drop of which, cast upon the ground, caused a new fountain to spring up. Elisha was such a fountain. Each word, each deed of his, like the fabled drops, caused new fountains to spring by the wayside of his long career.

Lingerie of Paper.

Mrs. John J. Carter, of London, arrived at St. Louis a few days ago for the purpose of securing a location to exhibit a new invention for which she is responsible in the way of paper underclothing for women. If the lady is successful in introducing this innovation the sewing machine will be put out of business to a very large extent and the laundress will have to go. One article to be placed on show is a night robe, seemingly of soft white china silk, edged with filmy lace and "run through" with ribbons of baby blue. It is dainty enough for the finest baby in the land and looks as if it cost a small fortune. It is worth at retail market price just 15 cents. Other underwear just as delicate but less elaborate was marked from five cents up. All were made from exquisitely fine paper, and woven instead of sewed.

Mrs. Carter thinks that when her clothing is properly advertised women will prefer it to the badly washed cotton and cambric that now form the average wardrobe. The garments are so cheap that it will pay women to buy them, and they are so beautiful that it will be a pleasure to wear nothing else. She is also carrying to the fair samples of beautifully-dyed, fleecy stuffs that look like eiderdown, which will make warm wrappers and baby blankets, and about five cents a yard and last as long as they can be kept fresh—which is all that can be said of woollens of the same color.
