By keeping the collars well cleared of any dirt which may accumulate upon them, from the sweating of the horse, and by bathing them daily with cold water, there need be but little fear of had shoulders. -The best milkers are not beef-fat, nor should they be burdened with superfluous flesh. And yet it is a mistake to suppose that their condition is a matter of no consequence. To see a herd of cows little more than animated shadows is an indication of a poor dairyman. Dairy cows should be well fed with milk-producing foods, with sufficient flesh-forming proper-ties to maintain a high state of physical vigor. It is hardly the right thing to de-prive her of a sufficiency of food and then milk her. milk ber. A knowledge of the habits of feeding -A knowledge of the habits of feeding is of value in selecting breeds of sheep for the farm. Merinos feed in a bunch, while the large open-wool breeds scatter like cat-tle. For herding with cattle, the larger breeds are preferable, as they do not spoil the grass, unless in large numbers. For fence pastures, used for sheep alone, the habits of the merino favor close feeding. For weeds ground sheep should be kent on For weedy ground sheep should be kept on scant pasture. If there is plenty of sweet grass, they will not touch the weeds. If grass is scarce the weeds are cropped low. -The hens that break and eat their eggs are usually those which are fed with kitch-en waste. Feeding with meat or animal meal seems to induce this had habit, and fowls that are supplied with corn, wheat, scalded bran and meal in abundance do not seem to practice this vice. Once it is contracted there seems to be no cure. A frequent provocation of the habit is giving egg shells to the fowls: they eat these with avidity, and then learn to break the eggs. Another cause is too close confinement in house and yard, and the leaving eggs in the nests to freeze, which break and are eaten. -Too much care can hardly be taken in packing pork so as to have it keep through the season. The chief requirements are pure salt and freeing the meat from every taint of blood. The pieces of pork should he packed as closely as possible. After a few weeks, if any soum rises on the brine, it should be cleaned out and the brine boiled so that all the impurities may be removed. If pork is kept all the summer twice boiling the brine may be necessary. It is claimed that for some reason a barrel that has once held beef will never do for pork although the rule may be reversed with impunity. -Do our farmers realize the importance of feeding their stock at regular hours? Take a lot of hogs which have to wait after Take a lot of hogs which have to wait after their regular time for feeding and see how restless and noisy they become. And what is true of them is true in a great measure of other animals. The man who is regular in his habits, eating at a regular hour, will, other things being equal, thrive best and be healthight and strongest; and what is in his names, cannot general, thrive best and be healthiest and strongest; and what is true of man in this regard is correspond-ingly true of the lower animals. A farmer can readily get into the habit of feeding his stock regularly, and they will fall into expecting it at a regular time, and rest patiently until the next feeding period comes about. Experiment in this direction would soon satisfy the most doubting of the truth of the value of regularity.

For prickly or common heat do not use ointments or creams, but apply some dry-ing solution. Diluted alcohol is good and a little bicarbonate of soda in a pint of water is excellent where there is much itching.

When standing correctly the weight of the body should be on the balls of the feet.

Before massaging the face it is necessar that the pores be cleansed and the skin free from dust, powder and dirt.

To straighten the shoulders and broaden the chest raise the arms in front to shoulder level, inner sides of hands touching, palms down, throw arms out and back at shoulder level, palms down. Repeat eight times. The lines on the forehead are caused by
