-The desire to try everything new that is introduced sometimes leads to mistakes. No new plant should be adopted until the farmer is satisfied that it is better than something already used by him. Alfalfa is something already used by him. Alfalfa is a success in some portions of the East, but it cannot take the place of red clover. In the West, especially in Colorado, alfalfa thrives better than clover. The climate and soil seculd always be considered. Be-fore growing something new as a crop, first test it on a small plot.

-Many farmers make good butter, and take it to the country store, where it is sent off with other lots that are not so good. sent off with other lots that are not so good. Such farmers get no higher price for their butter than is paid others, and the farmer's reputation is never made. Good hutter will bring a high price anywhere, even in the nearest village, and the farmer who will seek a market for himself will soon be encouraged to keep more cows and make more butter.

-Ordinary whitewash, as frequently used, has very little effect, except to whiten the trees. To destroy the insects and eggs hidden in the crevices of the trees very much stronger applications have to be used. Soft soap, reduced to the consistency of a thick paint, with an addition of a strong solution of washing soda, makes one of the most lasting washes. A solution of of the most lasting washes. A solution of one pound of commercial potash in from two to four gallons of water is also very good.

-Blackberries pay well some years, everything depending on how the patch is is managed. Once a good growth of canes is obtained the field should produce crops for fifteen years or more, but manure should be applied every year. The borer is the greatest enemy, but it can be kept in oheck if the infected canes are out out and burned. Cultivation of blackberries is not usually so frequent as for some crops, and in proportion to the small amount of labor bestowed on blackberries they pay as well as any crop grown on a fruit farm. Winter killing is one of the principal drawbacks.
