FIRST BLOODSHED

Civil Engineer Shot By Striking Miner

at Moosic. Scranton, Pa., April 3 .- The first bloodshed of the anthracite strike of 1906 occurred at Moosic, where John Shepherd, civil engineer at Consolidated colliery of the Pennsylvania Coal company, an Erie working, was shot in the hip by Anthony Coplosk, a striking miner.

There is a stockade about the breaker, and guards are patrolling inside. Coplosk had some words with one of the guards, and Silas Randall. son of the outside foreman of the latter, came towards the striker in a threatening manner. Coplosk drew a revolver and fired at Randall. The bullet struck Shepherd, who was standing by. The wound is not serious. The man who did the shooting escaped. As was expected, there was practically no mining of coal at any colliery in the Lackawanna region, except at the one non-union mine of the whole anthracite region, the Oxford colliery of the People's Coal company.

The Erie worked seven washeries: the Lackawanna five, and the other companies one or two apiece. The washeries worked full-handed, or near-

"We are going to have a strike," said the superintendent of one of the largest operating companies in the entire region. "It will be even more bitterly contested than was the strike of 1903, and it will last just as long, in my opinion. I do not think that anything whatever will result from the conference to be held in New York. That is my firm conviction."

WILKES-BARRE REGION QUIET

Men Think Agreement Will Be Reached, But Operators Are Gloomy. Wilkes-Barre, Pa., April 3.-In accordance with the order issued by President Mitchell, of the United Mine Workers, and the district presidents, not a colliery in the Wyoming Valley is in operation. The suspension is general, and no effort has been made to operate any of the large collieries. The Pettebone washery of the Lackawanna company near here was operated with a reduced force, with no interference. Outside of this, the strike order was generally observed.

The conditions in this city, Plymouth, Nanticoke and Pittston were extremely quiet, no outbreaks being reported from any of these places.

The number of men affected by the suspension in this city will reach 26,000.
