DOWN TO DEATH WITH PIER

Workmen Hurlled Into Harbor By Collapse of Structure.

Baltimore, April 29.—With a rush that terrified thousands and a crash that drove a wave six feet high to distant parts of the inner harbor of Baltimore, nearly half of a new pier under construction at Locust Point, broke away from the shore end and plunged into the water.

Out of the wreckage 10 dead bodies have been taken, and 18 men are suffering from injuries more or less severe.

While many theories are advanced, no one is willing to say with anything like certainty why the catastrophe occurred. The new pier was being built by the Baltimore Bridge company and the McLean Contracting company for the Baltimore & Ohio railroad and was to have been used by the steamers of the Johnson line. It was a two-story structure, 930 feet long, about 500 feet of it being on land. The water end was built upon piles. There were heard warning cracklings, and the workmen were being called to places of safety when, as many of them were struggling through the doors in the fire wall, this collapsed and, with 430 feet of the water end of the pier, plunged into the harbor, carrying a number of men with it.

Great Britain's Aspirations.

London, April 30.—The Standard says that among the aspirations in the will of Cecil Rhodes to which Earl Grey, governor general of Canada, referred in his speech at the National Arbitration and Peace Congress banquet in New York, April 17, were the ultimate recovery of the United States by Great Britain, British occupation of the whole of Africa and South America and of the seaboard of China and Japan.

THEN SHOT HIMSELF IN HEAD

Philadelphia, April 30.—Marna Korais, a comely Prussian girl, was shot and instantly killed here under unusual circumstances by Franz Endruk, an enraged lover, who after murdering the girl sent a bullet into his own brain inflicting a wound from which he cannot recover.

Endruk, who was angry because the girl would not marry him, followed her to this country from the Province of Pomerania, in Rhenish Russia, where four years ago he attempted to kill her by beating her over the head with a hatchet. After this attempt he cut his throat in an effort to end his life and after lying for four months in a hospital, according to the information given to the coroner, he was sentenced to one year and eight months imprisonment. How he got into this country with a penal record has not been ascertained.

After the assault in Europe, Miss Korais, who was the daughter of a physician and a school teacher, came to Philadelphia. Endruk, despite the refusal of the girl to marry him in his native country, followed her to America and to Philadelphia. He went to work at Cramp's ship yards and boarded in the northern section of the city. Miss Korais secured a place as maid in the home of August Ramstein, in the southern section of the city.

Endruk came upon the girl in the street on Easter and immediately endeavored to renew his attentions. He was repulsed. He followed the girl about and threatened to kill her unless she married him. Finally Miss Korais caused a warrant to be issued for his arrest, but at the last minute she declined to prosecute him.

Endruk followed the girl from the home of her employer to a nearby bakery and pressed his suit in the store. The girl in fear told him she would sooner die than marry him, whereupon he drew a revolver and sent two bullets into her brain. He then turned the weapon against himself and sent one of the leaden missiles into his head, falling unconscious across the body of the girl. Endruk is 33 years of age and his victim was 22.

Books, Magazines Etc.

In the May number The Century begins David Homer Bates's reminiscences of "Lincoln in the Telegraph Office," which promise new light on a phase of President Lincoln's daily life during the war hitherto little considered. Mr. Bates was manager of the War Department Telegraph Office and cipher operator from 1861 to 1866; and the opening chapters of the series are full of Lincoln's visits, morning, afternoon and evening, to the War Department telegraph office. There is also an intimate account of McClellan and his relations to the administration, and on at least one important point—the suppression of dispatches—the article has the interest of surprise. A most timely article is George M. Stratton's discussion of "Railway Disasters at Night," a warning presentation of the falling and dangers of our present system of signals. Other notable features of the May issue are a sketch of Jamestown by Thomas Nelson Page, more "Stories of Whistler," and Ernest Rhy's "William Sharp and Fiona MacLeod."

To be specially noted among the pictorial features of the number are Sigismund de Ivanowski's ideal of "Lorna Doone," "Heroines of Fiction;" and reproductions of group of ideal photographs—"A Tale of Ischia," "The Death of the Rose," etc.—posed and produced by F. Benedetto Herzog.

The two strong serials, Frances Hodgson Burnett's "The Shuttle" and Elizabeth Robins's "Come and Find Me," are rivals in interest; and there are short stories by Will Adams, Margherita Aulina Hamma, Mary Talbot Campbell, Maud Egerton King and L. R. Elder.

There are the beginnings of two enticing new serials in the May St. Nicholas.—The first is a story of old London town, "A Little Field of Glory," by Mary Catharine Lee, with pictures in this number, too—"Tom, Dick and Harriet," the scenes and several of the characters being those of "The Crimson Sweater." There are also new adventures of Fritz and Perkins, and short stories by Mildred Stapley, "The K. and A. Company," "Dorothy's May Basket," by Claire H. H. Gurney, and for very little folk, "The Barkin' at the Farm."

Of more serious articles, there is a sympathetic study of Henry D. Thoreau, "The Man Who Was Always a Boy," by Gilbert P. Coleman; and Charles Barnard gives an interesting account of the workings of the Telharmonium, that wonderful invention.

And there are hours of profitable entertainment for big and little in Natural and Science, the St. Nicholas League, and the "Hints and Helps for Mother," this time all about the fun to be had out of newspapers.

McCLURE.—The cover of the May McClure's is in full color reproduction of a Blenden Campbell painting, and the frontispiece a color illustration by F. E. Schoonover to accompany C. P. Conolly's "The Flight of the Copper Kings." This article is also well illustrated by several fine photographs and views. "The Entrance of Ezekiel" by Lucy Pratt is illustrated by numerous pen and ink drawings by Frederic Dorr Steele. Reproduction of eight fine portraits of Generals of the Civil War illustrate "The Reminiscences of a Long Life." E. L. Blumenschein contributes several strong illustrations for "A Fight in One Round." Gertrude Partington made four beautiful drawings that have etching qualities for "The Gentle Robber." "Mary Baker Eddy" is pictured with portraits of several of Mrs. Eddy's acolytes and a full page picture of her third husband Asa Gilbert Eddy. This always excellent monthly seems better than usual for the present month. Its table of contents covering some forty articles in prose and verse from the press of the most interesting writers in the country.

THE DELINEATOR FOR MAY.—Is a most interesting number for those who want to keep up with the fashions or who enjoy timely and breezy articles of the ladies generally, while its special articles mostly intended for women are of a character that should be read, and cannot be but useful to the public generally. It is an exceedingly good number of this popular publication.
