

Grover Cleveland is Dead

The Only Former President of the United States Passed Away at his Home in Princeton Wednesday Morning. Wife in Prostration. News of his Death Came as a Shock to the Entire Nation.

Princeton, N. J., June 24.—Ex-President Grover Cleveland died suddenly at his home in this city at 8:40 o'clock this morning. Death was unexpected, although he had been ill for a number of weeks and his condition was greatly weakened by his sickness.

Only yesterday Dr. Bryant, of New York, paid a visit to the Cleveland home, but the information was subsequently given out that his visit was not occasioned by any alarming conditions of the former president. Indeed, Mrs. Cleveland was particularly cheerful last night over her husband's condition.

The ex-president was apparently in good spirits and better health than for some time. He took outdoor exercise yesterday afternoon and retired at the usual hour. When the discovery of his death was made this morning the residents of Princeton were greatly shocked and the grief of Mrs. Cleveland is almost uncontrolable.

Heart failure, complicated with promboes and odema, was the direct cause of his death. The children were notified and hurried to Princeton from Tamworth, New Hampshire, where they have been staying with Mrs. Cleveland's mother. So sanguine was the family over the condition of Mr. Cleveland that it was not even thought advisable to keep the children at home.

Immediately after her husband's death Mrs. Cleveland collapsed. It marked the end of her life struggle which had been waged for years in the interests of her husband's health. After having collapsed, Mrs. Cleveland later rallied.

He was born in Caldwell, Essex county New Jersey, March 18, 1837, and was the son of Richard Falley Cleveland, a Presbyterian minister. His mother was Anne Neal, daughter of a Baltimore merchant. His advantages in early life were few, for the times of his youth were difficult, and even a minister's son could not clearly see the opportunities.

As a boy, he worked as clerk in a store, and in the support of his family. His two brothers were soldiers in the Civil war. He could not enlist, but he went to work as a clerk and worked many years afterward to pay him. At seventeen he was an assistant teacher in a school for the blind in New York city, and then went to Buffalo. Here he secured a position as copyist with a law firm and began to read Blackstone, being paid in the meantime $4 a week.

After being admitted to the bar, in 1859, his rise with the law firm was rapid, until he became manager at a salary of $1,000 a year. He supported his widowed mother. He became district attorney, afterward formed a law firm, known as Lansing, Cleveland & Fossum, and then was drawn into political life. His record as sheriff of Erie county was so good that it secured his election as mayor of Buffalo. He saved the citizens of the city $1,000,000 during the first six months of his term by vetoing extravagant appropriations.

This attracted outside attention, and he was elected governor of New York state the following year. In 1884 he was nominated by the Democratic national convention at Chicago, and defeated James G. Blaine. He was again a candidate in 1888, but was defeated by Benjamin Harrison. The distinction of being elected president after being defeated was his on the following election, when President Harrison was defeated.

Mr. Cleveland's services as trustee of the Equitable Life are of such recent occurrence and knowledge that they need no detailing. It remains only to touch on his domestic life.

At the age of 48 Mr. Cleveland married Frances Folsom, daughter of his deceased law partner, Oscar Folsom. Mr. Cleveland was one of the youngest and most gracious mistresses of the white house. Their domestic life was one of model happiness. With Mrs. Cleveland, four children survive: Esther, Francis Grover, Marion and Richard Folsom. The first child, Ruth, born in the white house died.

The funeral of former president Cleveland will be held on Friday, June 26, at Westland, Mr. Cleveland's residence on Bayard lane, Princeton, and will be strictly private.

"A Mighty River of the North"
Traversed by Steamers of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation Co.

[The trip referred to below is this week being enjoyed by the Pennsylvania editors and their wives or sweethearts. We hope all may have a most delightful time and return highly gratified with the beauties and pleasure of the outing, as well as with the well known hospitality of our northern neighbors.—Ed. WATSON.]

Symbol and song alike, but vainly tell
The mystery and romance of the spell,
And transported on that summer day
Sailed silent, on the far famed Saguenay.
Gentle reader, if thou art ever weary of the sin
and fever of civilization and long for the uninterrupted communion of Nature in her wild and grand aspects and which can only be secured beyond the haunts of men, let me tell of that mighty river of the north—the dark and famous Saguenay which pours its flood into the St.
Lawrence far below the ancient city of Quebec.

On one of the early summer's most perfect days, I found myself on the deck of one of the Richelieu and Ontario Navigation company's passenger steamers as it glided onward to that famous river of romance and mystery.

In the face of nature's masterpiece, the pen can only suggest but never exhaust. You must see the Saguenay to feel and understand its powers to soothe, to charm and to awe the res-less and curious mind of man. Descriptions and pictures, though helpful and suggestive are inadequate. Nothing can take the place of that face to face intercourse, which silences the most garrulous traveler and makes even the thoughtless feel that in the presence of this giant tributary of the St. Lawrence, sanctified by towering peaks and guarded by steep cliffs and forests primeval, is a solemn power like the brooding presence of the Almighty.

As you gaze from the steamer's deck upon the wonder of the Saguenay and look upon those rightly named mountains, "Eternity" and
"Trinity" and think how small and how transient are your own powers and works when contrasted with Nature, you are a strange and absorbed soul if you do not experience emotions too sacred for words to utter.

Many a man and many a woman wearied and bored with summer hotel life and looking for recreation which will elevate the mind and restore tone to the exhausted energies, could find at little expense the very thing they seek, in this wonderland of Canada. Indeed I doubt if anywhere in America there is another journey so full of delight to lovers of nature as the trip up the Saguenay.

O mighty river of the hills of God,
Silent and awful is thy memory
As in the vision lingering in my soul,
I see thee in the solemn sun light roll Thy dark and surging flood to meet the sea
—The Reverend F. T. Phelan, in the Worcester Spy.
