'You don't think Harriett belongs to you alone, do you? I think Harriett would resent any such idea as that. She likes me too well, and I like her too well. No, indeed, I have a minority interest in this cat."

"Sure." continued Roger, unabashed.

The girl laughed and rose to her feet.

"Well, come along," she said. "I suppose it's the best think we can do, and as it's Sunday afternoon we ought to be able to find lots of the people home."

Roger helped the girl down the steps, and, calling to Harriett, they walked down the street. Harriett, big. sleek and black, followed decorously enough until they reached a small, rather obscure cross street.

Roger happened to be looking back as they crossed this street and discovered Harriett very sedately ambling down the little thoroughfare.

"Come here, Harriett." Roger called and then whistled to the cat.

Harriett paid not the slightest attention, but continued her sedate walk away from Roger and the girl. Bessie called, but even to her Harriett paid no attention

"Well, I declare!" cried the girl in surprise. "Harriett has always been peculiar, but she has never acted like this before."

"Let's follow her and see where she goes," cried Roger. "Perhaps she is looking for a home or perhaps she has a home already picked out." "All right," said Bessie.

They turned back and hastened after Harriett, who was now about a fourth of a block ahead. The street was a quiet one. Neither Roger nor Bessie was familiar with it and had paid but little attention to it in previous times.

Now, however, they glanced curiously at the small, rather cozy houses which lined the sides. Although erected within recent years, they were almost old fashioned by comparison with the big buildings on the more important streets near by. It seemed as if the little street was a mere eddy in the swirling life and progress all around it.

"Oh, I like this street!" cried Bessie. Roger, with conviction.

For several blocks they followed Harriett, who continued her steady course. At last they saw the cat turn into a gate in a charming stone fence. and they hastened after her.

The fence inclosed a cozy little cottage, well set back from the sidewalk. In the yard were a couple of trees, a flower bed or two and a delightful path, bordered by a low hedge, which ran up to the spacious veranda.

The little home had such a piquant, happy look that involuntarily both Roger and Bessie smiled as they gazed at it.

Then Roger laughed. "Look who's on the veranda!" he again!" Harriett, with a sigh of content that appealed to the couple as almost human, rose from her spot and, purring loudly, rubbed her side against the arm with which Roger was clasping the girl.

Other Times, Other Manners. Sir Algernon West strikes a curious note on the ear of the present generation in the course of a book of reminiscences, "One City and Many Men." when he states that in his youth it was considered highly improper for a wife to address her husband by his Christian name or for a son to address his parents without saying "sir" or "ma'am." "I never heard my mother call my father by his Christian name," he writes, "and I recollect distinctly that the fame of a very fashionable and brilliant woman was seriously imperfled because after some great man's death a letter from her to him was discovered beginning with his Christian name.

"The formal 'sir' was current everywhere. At Eton we never recognized any departure from this practice, and letters between boy friends began, 'My dear sir.' "A friend of mine dining with Lady

Jersey heard her say she never recollected her father. Lord Westmoreland. though specially attached to her sister, Lady Lonsdale, calling her anything but Lady Lonsdale. And Henry Greville, who was present at the same dinner, said that he remembered his mother. Lady Charlotte, and her brother, the Duke of Portland, meeting in the morning at Welbeck abbey, when the salutations were: "'How is your ladyship this morning? "'I am quite well. I am obliged to your grace.'"

He Didn't Say It.

He was a good little boy, and he lived not many miles from Boston. He never disobeyed his mother, he never called her names when her orders were not his wishes, and he had the face of an angel. Next door lived lit-"It appeals to me, too," declared the Rosy, a girl who proved the proverb about small pitchers. One day Harry was allowed to go over to play with Rosy, but with strict orders not to take off his hat and coat to go in the house if Rosy could not come out into the yard.

Rosy could not come out, but would not Harry take off his things and play inside? Harry quoted sadly his mother's injunction.

"Your mamma is a silly," said Rosy crossly

Harry went home and told his mother what Rosy had said. "She is a very naughty little girl," his mother declared. "You must never say such a word." "No, mamma, I won't." said the duti-
