fall off

heah?

outside.

her hoss!" she cried. "Dr

Hartley say can dey bring her in

"Of course," said Douglas, hurrying

There were horrified exclamation:

from the women, who were aghast at the idea of a circus rider in the par sonage. In their helpless indignation

they turned upon the little deacon, feel

In the young pastor's arms was white, spangled burden of humanity

her slender arm hung lifeless over his shoulder. The silk stocking was torn from one bruised ankle; her hair fell across her face, veiling it from the unfriendly glances of the women. Doug-

Mandy reached the front door

"Where is she?" he demanded.

"Go way f'um here!" cried Mandy

Jim followed the direction of her glance and cleared the steps at a bound. Mandy pursued him, muttering angrily. Deacon Elverson, too, wa about to follow when a grim remind

from Miss Perkins brought him aroun

started back on opening it, for stand

his grotesque makeup. His whit clothes were partially concealed by small leather satchel, in the other a girl's sailor hat. A little tan coat was thrown across his arm. The giggles of the boy hiding behind his mother's skirt were the only greetings received by the trembling old man in the door-

He glanced uncertainly from one unfriendly face to the other, waiting for

"Excuse me," he said. "I just brought some of her little things. She'd better put on her coat when she goes

He looked again into the blank forward, trembling with anxiety. A sudden fear clutched at his heart, the muscles of his face worked pitifully,

"It ain't-it ain't that, is it?" he fal-

Even Miss Perkins was momentarily

touched by the anguish in the old man's voice. "I guess you will find the person you are looking for upstairs," she answered tartly and flounced out of the house, calling to Julia and the others to follow her and

declaring that she would soon let folks

know how the parson had brought a

"circus ridin' girl" into the parsonage.

ing from one wall to the other, then crossed the room and placed the alligator satchel and the little coat and hat on the study table. He was careful not to wrinkle the coat, for this was Polly's birthday gift. Jim and he had planned to have sandwiches and soda pop on the top of the big wagon

when they offered their treasures tonight. But now the wagons would soon be leaving, and where was Poly? He turned to ask this question as Mandy came down the stairs.

The painted clown stood alone, looktered, unable to utter the word that the red painted lips began to quiver.

out. It's gettin' kinder chilly."

filled him with horror.

ly thrust aside by Douglas.

Hasty fumbled with his hat and sparred for time. "Did yo' say whar's I been, sah?"

"Dat's what he done ast yo'," Mandy prompted threatening! "I bin 'ceived, Mars John," declared

Hasty solemnly. Mandy snorted incredulously. Douglas waited.

"A gemmen in de circus done tole me dis mawain' dat ef I carry water ing intuitively that he was enjoying fo' de el'phants he'll let me in de cir the drama. Elverson was retreating cus fo' nuffin', an' I make a 'greement toward the door when he was sudder wid him. Mars John, did yo' ebber seed an el'phant drink?" he asked, rolling his eyes. John shook his head. "Well, sah, he jes' put dat trunk a his'n into de pail jes' once an'-swishwater gone. Douglas laughed, and Mandy muttered sullenly. "Well, sah," continued Hasty, "I tote las passed out of sight up the stairwater fo' dem el'phants all day long way without looking to the right of an' when I cum roun' to see de circus left, followed by the doctor. de gemmen won't let me in. An' when I try to crawl under de tent dey pulls time to push back a crowd of intrudme out by de laigs an' beats me." He ers. She had barely closed the doc looked from one to the other, expect when it was thrust open by Jim. ing sympathy.

"Sarves you right," was Mandy's unfeeling reply. "If yo's so anxious to as her eyes unconsciously sought the be a-totin' water, jes' yo' come along outside and tote some fo' Mandy."

"I can't do no mo' carryin', Mandy." protested Hasty. "I's hurted in mair arm.

"What hurt yo'?"

"Tiger." "A tiger?" exclaimed the women in and he made for the door instead. He

"Done chawed it mos' off," he de ing on the threshold was a clown in clared solemuly. "Deacon Elverson, he seed it, an' he says I's hurt bad." "Deacon Elverson!" cried the spin-large traveling ulster held together by small water pitcher and searching for a bottle of brandy which had been placed in the medicine chest for emergencies.

"You can take these upstairs," he told her when he had filled the pitcher with water and found the liquor. Mandy looked threateningly at Toby, then reluctantly went on her way.

who was just behind her, carrying a

Douglas turned-to the old man pleas antly. His was the first greeting that Toby had received, and he at last found voice to ask whether Polly was badly burt.

"The doctor hasn't told us yet," said Douglas kindly. "I'm her Uncle Toby-not her real uncle," the old man explained, "but

The painted clown stood alone that's what she calls me. I couldn't come out right away because I'm or in the concert. Could I see her now

"Here's the doctor," said Douglas as Hartley came down the stairs, follow ed by Jim. "Well, doctor, not bad, I

"Yes, rather bad." said the doctor. adding quickly as he saw the suffering in Toby's face, "but don't be alarmed She's going to get well."

"How long will it be before we can have her back-before she can ride again?" asked Jim gruffly as he stood apart, twisting his brown, worn hat in his hands.

"Probably several months," said the doctor. "No bones are broken, but the ligaments of one ankle are torn, and she received a bad blow on the head. It will be some time before she recov ers consciousness.

"What are we goin' to do, Jim? asked Toby helplessly.

"You needn't worry. good care of her here," said Douglas. seeing desperation written on their

"Here?" They looked at him in credulously. And this was a parson! "Where are her parents?" the doctor asked, looking at Jim and Toby.

"She ain't got no parents 'cept Toby an' me." replied Jim. "We've took care of her ever since she was : baby.'

"Oh, I see!" said the doctor. "Well one of you'd better stay here until she can be moved." "That's the trouble. We can't," said Toby, hanging his head. "You see, sit circus folks is like soldiers. No matter what happens, the show has to go on, an' we got to be in our places."

"Well, well, she'll be safe enough here," said the doctor. "It is a fortunate thing that Mr. Douglas can man age this. Our town hospital burned down a few months ago, and we've been rather puzzled as to what to do with such cases." He took his leave. with a cheery "Good night" and promise to look in upon the little po tient later. Jim shuffled awkwardly toward the pastor.

"It's mighty good of you to do this." a word of invitation to enter, but none he mumbled, "but she ain't goin' to be no charity patient. Me an' Toby is goin' to look after her keep."

> "Her wants will be very few," Douglas answered kindly. "You needn't trouble much about that." "I mean it," said Jim savagely. He met Douglas' glance of surprise with a determined look, for he feared that his chance of being useful to Polly might bo slipping out of his life. "You mustn't mind Jim," the clown pleaded at the pastor's elbow. "You see, pain gets some folks different from others, an' it always kinder makes him savage." "Oh, that's all right," Douglas answered quickly. His own life had been so lonely that he could understand the selfish yearning in the big man's heart. "You must do what you think best about these things. Mandy and I will look after the rest."

Jim hung his head, feeling somehow that the pastor had seen straight into his heart and discovered his petty weakness. He was about to turn toward the door when it was thrown open by Barker.

"Where is she?" shouted the manager, looking from one to the other. "She can't come," said Jim in a low. steady voice, for he knew the storm of opposition with which Barker would meet the announcement.

"Can't come?" shrieked Barker. "Of course she'll come. I can't get along still lingered near the table. without her. She's got to come." He looked at Jim, who remained silent and firm. "Why ain't she comin'?" he asked, feeling himself already defeat-

THIS WEEK In our Clothing Window, we have on display a few samples of Men's Suits that sell at $9.95

I don't want to tell you anything about these suits, as I would rather have you see them and know then for yourself, whether it's worth your while to have us serve you or not. Only listen to this-I want to impress upon your memory that these suits are the product that sell for $13.00 to $15.00 any place, where they handle as good clothes.

Specials in Ladies Shoes This Week

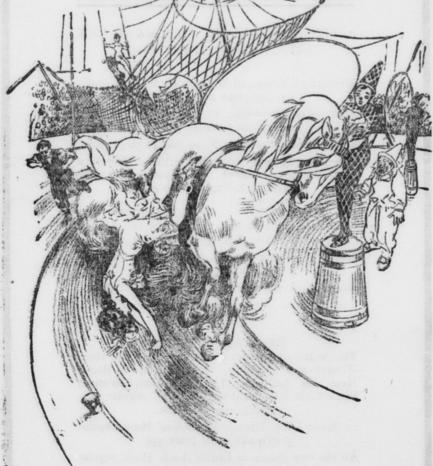

OUR BOY'S CLOTHES

Are as Wear-Resisting as Needle, Thread and "Know-How" can make them.

American Boys, especially those around Bellefonte, lead the strenuous life and must have garments to stand the tension imposed by the knocks and shocks of hard use. Clothes that are made right of honest fabrics, and reinforced at all points where the strain falls, with seams extra strengthened and buttons sewed on well, will keep the most scrive boys neatly outfitted for a surprisingly long time. This is the kind of clothes that bear the CLASTER LABEL, and are also on display this week in our show windows. SEE THEM.

PRICES RANGE FROM $1.29 to $4.95.

BINGO GALLOPED ON, AND SHE FELL TO THE GROUND.

ster. "Was Deacon Elverson at the one button. In one hand he carried a circus?" "He was in de lot, a-tryin' to loo!

in, same as me," Hasty answered innocently

"You'd better take Hasty into the kitchen," said Douglas to Mandy, with a dry smile. "He's talking too much for a wounded man."

Mandy disappeared with the dis graced Hasty, advising him, with fin scorn, "to get de tiger to chaw off h! laigs, so's he wouldn't have to walk no mo'."

The women gazed at each other with lips closed tightly. Elverson's be havior was beyond their power of expression. Miss Perkins turned to the faces. Still no one spoke. He stepped pastor as though he were somehow to blame for the deacon's backsliding. but before she could find words to argue the point the timid little deacon appeared in the doorway, utterly unconscious of the hostile reception that Hasty bad prepared for him. He glanced nervously from one set face to the other, then coughed behind his

"We're all very much interested in the circus," said Douglas. "Can't you tell us about it?"

"I just went into the lot to look for my son," stammered the deacon. "! feared Peter had strayed."

"Why, deacon!" said Mrs. Willough-"I just stopped by your house and saw Mrs. Elverson putting Peter

The deacon was saved from further embarrassment by an exclamation from Julia, who had stayed at the window. "Oh, look; something has happened!" she cried. "There's a crowd. They are coming this way."

Douglas crossed quickly to Julia's side and saw an excited mob collecting before the entrance to the main tent. He had time to discover no more before Mandy burst in at the door, panting with excitement and roll-

"Well, if dar ain't anudder one!" she ing her large, white rimmed eyeballs. "Mars John, a little circus girl done "Never mind, Mandy," said Douglas, ed.

In the young pastor's arms was a white spangled burden of humanity.

"She's hurt bad." was Jim's laconic "The devil she is!" said Barker, looking at Douglas for confirmation. "Is that right?" "She won't be able to travel for som time," said Douglas. "Mr. Barker is our manager." Toby explained as he edged his way to the pastor's side. "Some time!" Barker looked at Douglas as though he were to blame for their misfortune. "Well, you just bet she will," he declared menacingly.

"See here, Barker, don't you talk to him like that," said Jim, facing the manager. "He's darned square, even if he is a parson." Barker turned away. He was not a bad hearted man, but he was irritated and upset at losing the star feature of his bill. "Ain't this my dodgasted luck?" he muttered to himself as his eye again traveled to the boss canvasman. "You get out of here, Jim," he shouted, "an' start them wagons. The show's got to go on, Poll or no Poll!"

He turned with his hand on the doorknob and jerked out a grudging thanks to the pastor. "It's all fired good of you to take her in," he said. "but it's tough to lose her. Good night!" He banged the door and clattered down the steps.

Jim waited. He was trying to find words in which to tell his gratitude. "No matter what happens, the show has None came, and he turned to go, with a short "Goodby."

"Much obliged," Jim answered gruff- mothers or fathers or grandfathers or ly. It was his only polite phrase, and grandmothers anywhere than among he had taught Polly to say it. Doug- us. Why, that girl's mother rode the las waited until Jim had passed down horses afore her, an' her mother afore the steps, then turned to Toby, who that, an' her grandmother an' grand-

"You'll tell her how it was me an' Jim had to leave her without sayin'

"I'll jes put this little bit of money like one big family. They tends to into her satchel." He picked up the their business an' takes good care of brown bag that was to have been will be sendin' her more soon." "You're going to miss her, I'm all this," the old man apologized. afraid," Douglas said, feeling an ir-confidence "Lord bless you, yes, sir!" Toby answered, turning upon him eagerly. faltered as his eyes roved hungrily to-"Me an' Jim has been father an' mother an' jes' about everything to that little one. She wasn't much bigger'n you'll be lettin' us know how she is." a handful of peanuts when we begun a-worryin' about her." "Well, Mandy will do the worrying now," Douglas laughed. "She's been dying for a chance to mother some body all along. Why, she even tried it on me."

"I noticed as how some of those church people seemed to look kinder further pretext for staying. queer at me," said Toby, "an' I been the same about her."

"Oh, they're all right!" Douglas assured him. "They'll be her friends in

"She's fit for 'em, sir," Toby plenddle of her heart."

"I'm sure of it," Douglas answered.

to go on."

"I've heard how some church folks "Good night, Jim," said the paster. feels towards us circus people, sir, He crossed the room and took the big an' I jes' wanted you to know that there ain't finer families or better father afore that, an' there ain't nobody what's cared more for their good name an' their children's good name goodby, won't you, sir?" Toby pleaded. 'an her people has. You see, sir, cir-"Yes, indeed," Douglas promised. cus folks is all like that. They's jes' theirselves. They has to or they Polly's birthday gift. "Me an' Jim couldn't do their work. It's 'cause I'm leavin' her with you that I'm sayin'

"I'm glad you told me, Toby," Dougresistible desire to gain the old man's las answered kindly. "I've never known much about circus folks." "I guess I'd better be goin'," Toby

ward the stairway. "I'll send you our route, an' mebbe

"Indeed, I will," Douglas assured him heartily. "You might tell her we'll write ever" day or so," he added. "I'll tell her." Douglas promised earnestly.

"Good night!" The old man hesitated, unwilling to go, but unable to find

"Good night, Toby." Douglas exa-wonderin' if mebbe they might feel tended his hand toward the bent figure that was about to shuffle past him. The withered band of the white faced clown rested in the strong grasp of the pastor, and his pale little eyes sought the face of the stalwart man before ed. "She's good, clean into the mid- him. A numb desolation was growing in his heart. The object for which he had gone on day by day was being left behind, and he must stumble forth into the night alone.

"It's hard to leave her," he mumbled, "but the show has got to go on." The door shut out the bent, old figure. Douglas stood for some time where Toby had left him, still thinking of his prophetic words. His reverie was broken by the sounds of the departing wagons, the low muttered curses of the drivers, the shrieking and roaring of the animals, as the circus train moved up the distant hill. "The show has got to go on," he repeated as he crossed to his study table and seated himself for work in the dim light of the old fashioned lamp. He put out one hand to draw the sheets of his interrupted sermon toward him, but instead it fell upon a small sailor hat. He twisted the hat absently in his fingers, not yet realizing the new order of things that was coming into his life. Mandy tiptoed softly down the stairs. She placed one pudgy forefinger on her lips and rolled her large eyes skyward. "Dat sure am an angel chile straight from hebben," she whispered. "She done got a face jes' like a little flower."

"Straight from heaven," Douglas repeated as she crossed softly to the table and picked up the satchel and coat. "You can leave the lamp, Mandy. I must finish tomorrow's sermon."

She turned at the threshold and shook her head rather sadly as she saw the imprint of the day's cares on the young pastor's face.

"Yo' mus' be pow'ful tired," she "No, no; not at all. Good night,

Mandy.'