

FARM NOTES.

—Lyman A. Budlong, said to have been the most extensive grower of truck in the world, who died recently at his home in Chicago, left an estate of nearly $2,000,000. Practically all his family are engaged in the same line of work.

—There were shipped from a single station of New Jersey, 480 carloads of sweet potatoes. It is estimated that the total crop of South Jersey will aggregate 4000 carloads—total value $1,200,000. This is an increase of 240,000 barrels over last year.

—The United States, though blessed with the most fertile soil and favorable climate in the world, produces an annual average yield of less than 14 bushels of wheat per acre, while England produces more than 32, Germany 28 and the Netherlands 34.

—Trees and shrubs heeled in for winter should be heavily mulched and completely covered with straw or cornstalks during the coldest part of winter to prevent them from drying out. The soil about the roots should not be allowed to freeze deeply.

—New plants of named varieties can be started in winter from cuttings of a number of hardwood trees, shrubs and vines, such as the grape, pear, hydrangea, privet, rose, poplar and willow. The cuttings, however, must be made before the buds have been injured by freezing.

—The quieter and more comfortable a young animal can be kept, with good feed, the faster it will grow. Calves like to lie and sleep in warm, sunny places. By providing them with such quarters they will sleep and turn their feeds to more profit than when confined in cold and uncomfortable quarters.

—It is all right to sprinkle hay and other dry cow feeds with salt or salty water, but it is not a good plan to mix salt with ground feeds. An overdose of salt with a cow impairs the digestive organs, acting as a poison. Rock salt in the manger and lots is good. Granulated, coarse salt should be kept in a box under the cover of a shed where the cows can lick it at any time they may wish. A little salt every day is what they need.

—The cellar or other similar room in which vegetables and fruits, either green or canned, are stored for winter should have the windows open on mild days for ventilation and for lowering the temperature of the room for chilling the store. The cooler they are held, without freezing, the better they will keep. Bacteria which cause fermentation and decay cannot grow and multiply in low temperature. Dry cold will always hold them in check.

—Cows, above all other animals, are averse to drinking cold water. Many cows will go without water for two or three days before drinking out of a pond, stream or vessel containing ice. The drinking of plenty of water is necessary to a full flow of milk, and it pays to furnish cows with water warm enough so that they will drink all they need. It will pay to heat the water on the kitchen range and carry it to them, rather than have them go without.

—While the milk cows are on dry feed the digestive organs do not work so freely as when they are on green feed. To keep their digestive organs in good tone and the bowels normally loose, feed some oil meal daily. The oil meal not only maintains the digestive organs in good working order, but it is one of the best milk-producing feeds, being highly nutritious. Musty and bad feeds of any kind are not good cow feeds. They are not only poor in nutrients, but dangerous to health.

—Salt is necessary to the health and thrift of domestic animals; and they should have it in winter as well as in summer. They need more of it, probably, during the period of abundant succulent feed, but the animal system requires more or less of it all the time. A good plan is to keep salt in shelled boxes where the stock can get at it at will. This is a safeguard against neglect, and being accustomed to it at pleasure, there is no danger that too much will be taken.

—Sod land is very good for almost all crops if the season is reasonably wet and other conditions are favorable. One of the worst troubles with corn in sod land is that the cutworms living in the sod destroy much of the young corn. By plowing sod land for corn in late fall or early winter many of the cutworms will be destroyed. Also, when the land is plowed at this time the sod will have more time to settle and decay, and the corn next season will stand dry weather better. If the sod must be plowed again next spring, no harm, but much good, will be done. Plowing any land twice for a crop, or discing well after plowing is labor well spent.

—A sudden change from green foods to those which contain a small percentage of water frequently results in a derangement of the bladder or kidneys. Many times the urine becomes thick and turbid, and it is very difficult for the animal to urinate. If the trouble is allowed to continue for a very long period death may result. Any of the following remedies may be administered with excellent results: Juniper berries, four ounces; boiling water, one gallon. Let stand in a covered vessel for an hour and then strain. Give one pint three times each day till the animal is relieved. Another remedy may be provided without the aid of drugs. Mix one part of slippery elm bark with two parts poplar bark and make a strong tea from the mixture. Sweeten with sugar or molasses and give a pint every five hours.

—The Ohio Experiment Station believes that it is a good plan for the farmer to learn something of a man's reputation through his neighborhood before buying trees of him. Then, if possible, go early in the season and examine his trees. If an order is given, specify that the trees must be of his own growing and that there must be no substituting. If ordering from a distant firm select those who advertise in first-class periodicals and specify, as before, no substituting. Reputable nurserymen and seedsmen try to keep their stock pure and the varieties true to name, but they often buy of others and mistakes may occur in handling. If nurserymen and seedsmen are to be censured more than other business men for lax methods, says the director of the Ohio station, it is because they get stock from doubtful sources, by exchange or purchase, and because they so often substitute a variety which is "just as good."

FOR AND ABOUT WOMEN.

DAILY THOUGHT.

If you've anything good to say of a man, Don't wait till he's laid to rest. For the eulogy spoken when hearts are broken Is an empty thing at best. Ah! the blightest flower now drooping lonely Would perfume the mountain side If the sun's glad ray had but shone today And the pretid bud expired. "Heart Throbs," in National Magazine.

"The origin of the safety pin," said an historian of inventions, "was a little boy, an English blacksmith's son."

"The little boy—Harrison by name—had to look after his baby brother. The baby often cried, and his tears were usually traced to punctures. The boy nurse tried a long time to bend pins into such form that they could be used with safety to his brother's flesh.

"In this he failed; but his father, the blacksmith, perceiving the utility of the idea the lad had been at work on, eventually turned out the safety pin that is in use today all over the world."—Home Notes.

There is something fascinating in a scented handkerchief, when some elusive and faint odor is used. Handkerchiefs should never be perfumed heavily.

The faint and delicate odors are very hard to obtain, and one of the best ways to get the results with handkerchiefs is to put a small piece of orris root in the water in which the handkerchiefs and fine liffgerie ties are boiled.

This gives the faint odor and does away with the heavy perfume smell. A large piece of orris root can be placed in the water in which delicate underwear is being washed.

Waffles Raised with Yeast.—Scald a cup and three quarters of milk, add half a teaspoonful butter and a salt spoonful salt, then cool to lukewarm. Stir in a quarter cake of compressed yeast, dissolved in a quarter cup lukewarm water, and a pint of flour, and beat well.

Visiting cards on which "Mr. and Mrs." is engraved have come prominently into use this season. For several seasons they were rarely seen except when accompanying gifts and even then separate cards from the man and woman were more often used. But now the double card has its place in every card case, though custom has not yet entirely decided the detail of its use.

In paying visits a married woman, calling upon another who is married, may leave one of the Mr. and Mrs. cards, and then a single one of the man's, the separate card being for the husband of the hostess. But many smart women are of the opinion that two cards of such extremely different size do not look well together, and so when more of the man's than of the wife's are to be left, they cling to those entirely separate, using their "Mrs." and two of the "Mr." Nevertheless, good form sanctions the other method.

When a married woman calls upon a single woman, she is expected to leave just one of the double card. This is far smarter than hers and her husband's separately. In sending presents of any kind, even flowers, if they go from a married woman the double card is used. It is correct to write a line of good wishes on condolence, if one desires, but it is not altogether elegant, the theory being that, should one wish to say anything, a note must be written, as a card is to bear the name only.

In size the double cards are appreciably larger than even the extreme varieties used for a married woman. The same type is used, the preference being for old English or block, the name to be written in full, initials being incorrect. Rather heavier pasteboard is used than was in vogue several years ago, but it could not by any chance be called thick. A cream is preferred to an ivory tone. Addresses, including the number, are written in full, figures being regarded as an abbreviation.

Instead of wearing pure white gloves in the afternoon, the fashionable woman is inclining toward a delicate pearl shade or pale apricot and tan colorings.

She is choosing for motor wear the "chevrette" of elbow length, with a strap at the wrist to pull the leather together. This is generally lined with fur or wool. Women find it hard to approve of the sharp dividing line between long sleeves and short gloves, and are wearing with afternoon toilettes longer shapes which pass in wrinkled fullness over the cuffs. Gloves of two-button length are worn with coat suits. The buttons are very large and are made of mother-of-pearl.

For driving mocha gloves in pale colorings, which, strange to say, wear much better than the dark ones, are popular. Of course, the evening gloves are virtually the same. Long white gaiters, with occasionally a decoration to carry out the scheme of the gown, are worn.

By way of a collar protector there is a soft fold of silk worn within the neck of the coat, and never were they more necessary than today. The cloth coat cannot be allowed to rub against the delicate lace and not of the modern yoke; no more is it advisable to allow the harsh clinging thread of the metallic laces to wear away the broadcloth of the coat collar.

A bias of silk is folded together and slipstitched; its ends are drawn to a point and finished with ball or tassel. This is basted along the inside of the coat collar as far as the shoulder seam, so that it may be always in place at the back and may be crossed in front at the discretion of the wearer.

Its ends hang to the waist line, and when the coat is opened fall gracefully, contributing to a decorative scheme if the color be chosen with the costume in view. Some of the French brocades may be thus utilized.

Huge muffs formed of two kinds of material are proving an immense boon to women who possess out-of-date furs too good to be thrown away. Two kinds of fur may be combined. Chinchilla combined with ermine, sable and caracul, or an expensive strip with a cheaper fur will raise last year's collar or muff to a higher plane of fashionable style.

Then, again, fur may be added to velvet, satin, chiffon or satin beaver, and from a small hard muff of two seasons ago a huge soft shape can be evolved. Collars can be widened in a similar way by combining strips of fur with other materials.

Bird that Never Flies.

The ostrich, because of its resemblance to the camel, has been said to be the connecting link between beasts and birds. There is a honry excrecence on the breast of both the dromedary and the ostrich, on which they lean while resting; they have similarly formed feet; the same muscular neck; their food is much the same, and both can go an incredibly long time without water.

Moreover an ostrich never flies, nor is it possible for it to lift itself from the ground in the slightest degree by the use of its wings; but like the camel it is very swift-footed. In its native country the shells of the eggs afford almost the only household utensils used. An egg will weigh from three to four pounds and is equal to two dozen hen's eggs. It requires thirty-five minutes to boil one, and longer if required hard. A fresh egg is worth twenty-five dollars.

The keeper of an ostrich farm says the birds are the only thing he ever tried that he has not succeeded in taming. They are known to live to be seventy-five years old, and some think they will reach a hundred. They are about eight feet in height. Their hearing and sight are very acute, and these senses are about all the sense they are blessed with. Their legs are very powerful, and are the only weapon of defense; when they attack an enemy they do so by kicking, but always strike forward and never backward.

The choice "ostrich feathers" are found only in the wings; the undressed feathers vary in price, having been as low as twenty-five dollars per pound and as high as three hundred dollars, and there are from seventy to ninety feathers in a pound. A single bird rarely furnishes more than a dozen fine feathers; and the birds themselves, as fine ones, are valued at one thousand dollars per pair.

The Muskrat as a Delicacy.

The trapping of muskrats is the means of livelihood for a great many persons in this country, and the eastern shore of Chesapeake Bay, in the State of Maryland, is probably the most fertile field for that industry. In that section alone the sale of skins this season will amount to nearly $500,000. But the pelt is not the only value connected with the taking of the muskrat, because it is frequently used for food. Practically every restaurant on the Maryland peninsula serves muskrat when in season, and it is a favorite dish at midnight suppers.

The majority of persons are disgusted by the mere thought of eating muskrat, but undoubtedly this is due to the prejudice against the name of rat. However, they are greatly mistaken in disliking this rodent, for it is one of the cleanest of living animals, and is delicious when properly cooked.

The muskrat's home is built of marsh grass heaped into a mound and situated above the level of high-water. This house is dry and warm and the interior is always spotless clean. Feeding entirely upon tender roots and herbs, this peculiar little animal invariably scrubs thoroughly in the water every bit of food before it is eaten.

A young mother living in New York, recently drowned herself in agony at the discovery that she was a consumptive and had transmitted to her child the seeds of consumption. When the doctors told her the child was diseased she caught him in her arms and they died together. Consumption is not hereditary. Consumption has been cured, a fact which the lungs show the healed scars of tuberculosis. Hope should never be taken from the consumptive. It is a certain thing that people with obstinate cough, bronchitis, bleeding at the lungs, weakness and emaciation, conditions which if neglected or unskillfully treated terminate in consumption, have been perfectly and permanently cured by the use of Dr. Pierce's Golden Medical Discovery.

—Are we slaves or are we free men?" thundered the orator. "I pause for a reply." "Some of us are married," came the answer from the last row of seats.

Canadian Sod Houses.

The traveller in the Canadian provinces of Saskatchewan and Alberta is astonished at the great number of sod houses which are scattered throughout the prairie farming district. These do not occur in the vicinity of the towns, but are out about ten miles or more. One might suppose that such rude structures were the result of poverty. On the contrary, the sod houses denote advancing prosperity.

When the homesteader takes up a section of that wonderful wheat land in western Canada he plants his crop at the earliest possible moment in order that he may not miss a harvest. Often he is occupied to such an extent with these agricultural operations that he neglects his dwelling-house and hurriedly throws together a rude makeshift of sod. Even though it were desired to erect a frame-house this could be done only with great difficulty because of the scarcity of lumber. It is far better to live in temporary quarters until the railroad pushes out into that territory and brings the comforts of civilization. However, these sod houses are by no means uncomfortable, for they are wonderfully cool in summer and correspondingly warm in winter.
