Planting Trout Fry.

Sportsmen in other parts of the State are protesting against the practice of our State Fisheries Department in sending out trout fry and particularly in sending them out in February and March. Personally we have helped with the work of stocking local streams with fry for more than twenty years and honesty compels the admission that results have been far from satisfactory.

Millions upon millions of the tiny fish have been planted in our streams and at no time has there been an apparent increase in the number there later. The first and serious trouble in planting fry was the lack of intelligence in doing the work. The vital necessity being to have the water in the cans in which the fry are transported at the same temperature as that of the water in which they are planted. If this is not done there is little chance of any of the fish withstanding the shock of a sudden change. We have always thought it futile to plant them so early in the spring, because the March and April floods carry them out over the stream banks where they are left to perish when the water recedes.

Two years ago we helped plant several cans of fry in Fishing creek, Clinton county, as an experiment in later planting. We did not plant them until the latter part of June when the waters had fallen to their normal summer condition and frequent visits to the pools afterwards revealed that the little trout were thriving and actually had grown large enough by November to be quite able to resist the ordinary floods on the streams.

There seems to be no particular advantage, unless it is a saving in ice, to plant the fry so early; while there are certainly many disadvantages. Aside from the personal experience recounted above the present practice of sending the trout out in February and March often finds them landed at a point miles away from the streams, with the weather anything but fit for such work as is necessary to properly place the fish. Ice and snow covered roads and woods have to be traversed and the enthusiast is an enthusiast, indeed, who undertakes the work of landing the fish at their destination.

We honestly believe that Commissioner tenth as many fish as he is each year, but have them at least two or three inches long and then not send them until June or, better, the latter part of July when the trout fishing season has ended and the streams are not being disturbed by fishermen.

---Governor HARMON, of Ohio, was inaugurated the other day without ceremony. At the time fixed by law for the event he left his desk, took the oath of office and returned to his official work. Governor TENER, of Pennsylvania, was inaugurated on Tuesday. There was a magnificent pageant in the streets of Harrisburg to celebrate the event and the people will be taxed fifteen or twenty thousand dollars to pay the expenses of the affair. But there is a vast difference, temperamentally and otherwise, between Governor HARMON and Governor TENER. Besides there is a good deal of difference in public expectations with respect to the administrations of these "Gov'nors both," as the famous, or infamous, "Rough Ridinghood" would phrase it.

Settlement of the Graft Cases.

The settlement of the civil suits against the capitol grafters for something like $1,300,000 may be justified on the principle that "a bird in hand is worth two in the bush," but hardly on any other that they felt afraid of the pending litigation. In view of that fact the State ought kept them running.

It is reasoned, of course, that one of is now being occupied by them. the largest beneficiaries of the grafting operations, contractor SANDERSON, is of greater advantage both to justice and and two or three other things we fail to made in the Petersburg cemetery on the public than the small sum which remember.
