morning, Mr. James Cornelly left at this office an account book of his grand-father, John Farley, who in 1836-7 was a sub contractor on the long ago abandoned canal between this place and Lock Haven. It is a record of the payments to, and credits for labor of men employed by him, and shows that while laborers at that time were paid, what at this time would be called "starvation" wages, they were able to purchase many of the necessaries of life at prices comparatively as low, when compared with prices of today, as were their wage rates. In this book accounts are shown with many men, descendants of whom are still among us, his party. and with many others whose names the many readers of the WATCHMAN today.

AN OLD-TIME REMINDER. - The other

Among those who, away back in 1836 found employment with Mr. Farley, and who have descendants still living among us, were John Nolan, Wm. Cooney, Edward Dowling, James Farley, John Cullins, Thomas Kain, (now spelled Kane,) Michael Corrigan, Richard Boyle, John Dowling, Michael Doyle, Richard Powers and Edward Kelly. John Nolan seems to have acted as book-keeper and the others, along with a long list of names that would be strange now to our people, as day laborers.

The wages generally paid were 50 cents a day and board. In some instances 75 men at 5 cents per lb.; bacon at 10; whiskey at 62 cents per gallon; boots at $2.37 per pair; tobacco 25 cents per lb.; salt 61 cents per quart; nails 10 cents per pound; muslin 15 cents per yd.; sugar 121 cents per lb.; calico 25 cents per yd.; coffee 14 cents per lb.; potatoes 371 cents per bushel; mackerel 6} cents each; codfish 61 cents per pound; tea $1.00 per lb. The only articles of clothing we find entered up are, one pair of pantaloons $5.00; one pair woman's stockings, charged to Catharine Leavy, at 44 cents, and two shirts to one of the workmen at 45 cents each.

Altogether it shows that the day laborers of today have considerably the better of their brother toilers of three-fourths of a century ago, when the wages paid him for his work, and the prices charged him for his living are compared with what they receive and what they must pay for similar articles, except in the matter of whiskey and tobacco, beef and bacon.

Informally accepting the Democratic nomination for the presidency, of which he was officially notified by a committee including many governors and other leaders of his party at Sea Girt, N. From the broad veranda of the white-coated house the nominee delivered his speech. Grouped beneath wide-spreading willows and elms were the more prominent guests, hedged in by clumps of ferns and bushes. The governor read from his manuscript.
