

Edmund Kean as Richard.
It is impossible to form a higher conception of Richard III. than that given by Kean. Never was character represented by greater distinctness and precision and perfectly articulated in every part. If Kean did not succeed in concentrating all the lines of the character he gave a vigor and relief to the part which we have never seen surpassed. He was more refined than Cooke, bolder and more original than Kemble. The scene with Lady Anne was an admirable specimen of bold and smiling duplicity. Wily adulation was firmly marked by his eye, and he appeared like the first tempter in the garden. Kean's attitude in leaning against the pillar was one of the most graceful and striking positions ever witnessed. It would serve as a model for Titian, Raphael or Salvator Rosa. Tone was a quality which Kean possessed over every other actor that ever appeared. Many have attempted his style, and all have most egregiously failed.—William Hazlitt.

Real Nice Neighbors.
A strange couple had moved in the first floor flat and soon proved themselves undesirable, thereby marring what had been a perfectly respectable atmosphere. The woman across the hall reported to the owner of the property that she had listened at the court window and heard a very odd conversation going on between the man and woman.

The woman's shrill voice accused the man: "You stole them portieres, you know you did, and you stole that go-cart for the baby, too; you know you did."
"Yes, I did," replied the man's voice complacently. "I stole the portieres because you had been wishing for some, and your mother liked them so well when she saw them that she asked me to steal a pair for her too."
They moved out the next day by request.—Kansas City Star.

The Story of the Pearls.
Nearly everybody in a social set composed of elderly people who live in the upper part of New York has heard the story of the pearls. It is a true story without a moral. The men of the dinner party were smoking and the women were in the drawing room. "I have always admired your pearls," said Mrs. A., who was seated next to Mrs. B. "And I think yours are just lovely," retorted Mrs. B. politely. "Yes, but I would gladly give mine for yours." "You would be sorry if you did." "I should be perfectly willing to take the risk." Mrs. B. smiled and, leaning over, whispered: "They are not real. The only genuine thing about the piece is the clasp. The diamonds are real ones." "Is that so?" said Mrs. A. "Well, even the clasp of mine is a make believe." And then the men came in.—New York Tribune.

An Object Lesson.
Visitors to Durham cathedral are shown a round column in the transept with zigzag grooves cut as ornamentations from top to bottom. Behind the column a short distance apart are two long windows, and the light from these falling on the column has the curious effect of throwing it out of the perpendicular. Looked at from one side, the column appears to lean to the left, but on the visitor shifting his position an opposite result is obtained. It is only by standing directly in front of the column, with the light falling equally on both sides, that one is able to see how correctly the builders really worked. It is said that the deception was contrived so that those who saw the column might be reminded that it is necessary to see things from the proper point of view before expressing an opinion.

Punishment For Smokers.
Tobacco was first carried into Turkey by English sailors, and its use was quickly prohibited, chiefly on religious grounds. As in Russia, a tradition was discovered prohibiting its use by the faithful. Mohammed, it was said, had prophesied that in future ages some of his followers would smoke an herb called tobacco, but these would be unbelievers. Sultan Amurath IV. strictly prohibited its use. Search was made for smokers, and when they were found tobacco pipes were driven through their cheeks and rolls of tobacco hung as collars round their necks. Thus arrayed, they were mounted on asses, facing the tall, and driven through the streets to be hanged as a warning to lusters after tobacco.

Some Consolation.
Patient (gloomily)—I don't seem to be gaining very fast, doctor. Doctor (cheerfully)—You can't expect to get well at one jump. You will have to regain your health gradually day by day—sort of on the installment plan, as it were. Patient (brightening up)—Well, doctor, if this thing keeps on much longer I'm afraid you'll have to collect your bill in the same way.—New York Journal.

Expressed the Wrong Way.
The lecturer arose and said impressively: "Every time I see a young man coming out of a saloon I want to go right up to that young man and say, 'Turn right around, young man; you're going the wrong way.'"—New York Mail.

Cheering Up Her Friend.
Nell—Jack told me last night he had given me his heart. Belle—Well, it's damaged goods. He told me last week I had broken it.—Boston Transcript.

He Was Out.
Tightwad—We're out when he came to borrow that ten? Easy-mark—No, but I was when he left.—California Pelican.

The Sequel to Baron James' Posing as an Artist's Model.

Many stories, with or without good foundation, are told of the Rothschild family. In a book, "The Romance of the Rothschilds," by Ignatius Balla, one is related of Baron James Rothschild, who looked after the interests of the firm in Paris. The famous painter, Eugene Delacroix, who was struck with the features of Baron Rothschild, decided that he would like to have the baron for a model dressed in beggar's rags.

The baron liked the idea and consented. On the following day he went to the painter's studio attired in costume proper to his part, and when he knocked one of the artist's pupils opened the door. He looked compassionately at the "poor beggar" and gave him a coin or two. He was not a little astonished when on the following day a servant of Baron Rothschild handed him the following letter:

Dear Sir—You will find inclosed the capital which you handed me at the door of M. Delacroix's studio, with the interest and compound interest on it, a sum of 10,000 francs. You can cash the check at my bank in the Rue LaFite whenever you like. BARON JAMES ROTHSCHILD.

It's a good story, and we have no doubt it is true.—Westminster Gazette.

English and Irish Glass.
Each country has its distinctive types of glass, but it requires special and well trained perception to tell the difference between some of the English and Irish specimens of the last century and the careful copies which are now being made of them in European factories. The latter, however, can generally be known by their greater whiteness and lightness of weight. Waterford glass is now the most sought after by collectors, but equally beautiful pieces were made in the Cork and Dublin glass houses. Glassmaking can be traced back for about 2,300 years to the people who lived on the eastern shores of the Mediterranean, but its origin has never really been fixed. Its ingredients are still the same, and their proportions seem to have varied very little. Silica and an alkali—that is, quartz or flint and potash or soda—are still used.—Argonaut.

Not Very Noisy.
"How does Dorfling stand in this community?"
"Old Bill Dorfling?"
"Yes."
"Why, he makes about as much noise in this community as the letter 'b' does in the word 'debt.'"—Birmingham Age-Herald.

Heard at a Reception.
She—What, you, Mr. Jones? I never expected to see you here. I heard that you had met with an accident. He—Oh, no; that was my brother. She—I'm so sorry.—Boston Transcript.

BOOKS, MAGAZINES, Etc.
THEOSOPHICAL PATH FOR MAY.—(Official Organ of the Theosophical Movement, Katherine Tingley, editor, Point Loma, Cal.) in its May issue has for leading article "The Intelligence Behind Evolution," by Magister Artium, the keynote of which may be gleaned from the following: "Sooner or later science will have to come to the conclusion that even so-called inorganic matter is made up of tiny lives or animate beings, whose activities are directed by purpose. Life is the basis of Nature, and one omnipresent reality. . . . And back of life stands mind or consciousness. . . . Intelligence in the universe act in a natural manner, the forces of nature are their actions." "True science," the writer declares, "really reduces itself to the knowledge of how to live harmoniously."

Two articles in this issue should be of special interest to Masons: "Symbolism," by R. M. Chell, and "The Secret of the Alchemists," by P. A. M. "The Pivotal Point of History," by Kenneth Morris. The fascinating subject of "Japanese Gardens" is charmingly dealt with by E. S. Stephenson. "Brain, Mind, and Self," by H. T. Edge, M. A., and "New Diseases and Old Desires," by Lydia Ross. Other articles of general interest are: "Gibraltar," beautifully illustrated; "The Book of Nature in Chaucer;" "The Royal Astronomical Observatory, Greenwich," illustrated; "Am I My Brothers Keeper?"

This issue contains another poem, "The Huntsman's Elegy," by Kenneth Morris, the Welsh poet, and M. G. Gossell (late of the U. S. Forest Service) contributes an interesting article on the Columbia National Forest in Southern Washington, which is accompanied by a series of illustrations showing the effects of forest fires in that region. The magazine is beautifully illustrated.
