voice as from the battlefield. "Now let's have a-ahem!-I mean some re. | at his wife and Edith. "They are still freshments. Barket, tell old Margery to | in full commission. It is for us, as imserve the tea and things in here and bring up Heartsease, and then we'll swap stories about how some parts of the war might have been fought out. but weren't."

Jenny Buckthorn had to draw Heartsease out concerning his adventures after being wounded and captured in the raid on the signal station before the battle of Cedar Creek.

"Didn't you long to see your friends, and so forth, at home when you were in that prison?" she asked.

"Aw-naturally. However, there were quite a jolly lot of chaps there, and we had our own fun. We got up a regular orchestra and gave concerts, don't you know. I had a banjo with one string, and I played one tune on it-'Turkey In de Straw.' if I remember rightly. It went like this."

Here the captain stopped to drum it out on the piano with one finger.

"Oh. bother that!" Jenny exclaimed. "Tell them about the awful dangers you went through when you escaped from prison. I'll bet you were badly scared more than once?"

"No-only once, and that was all the time. One night I came face to face with a Confederate officer. It was Captain Thornton.

"Oh! What did you do?" everybody exclaimed, breathlessly.

"I killed him." answered Heartsease, with sudden intensity, looking up from the piano an instant, then dropping back mechanically to his one fingered "Turkey In de Straw."

That was all he ever said on the subject, and it was not until long afterward through other sources that the detailed story came out of how he had encountered the vindictive Thornton and after a desperate hand to hand combat had slain him with his own weapons.

"And 'twas afther Colonel West he was a-lookin', too, I'll go ball," put in Barket, who was waiting upon General Buckthorn at the moment. "That Thornton was a pizen divil."

"Mention of the military prisons reminds me," said General Haverill. "that I have a letter written shortly after Cedar Creek by a Captain Cox of a Kentucky regiment. Captain Cox was in Libby with-with Lieutenant Bedloe. He himself escaped from there some time later with the consid erable number of Union officers who crawled out through Captain Rose's tunnel from the cellar. He mentions another comrade-Captain Hunt, as I remember-who was finally exchanged when dying of consumption and lived fust long enough to reach home"

The conversation now turned to Ker chival West and the last engagemen in which he had participated, in the Shenandoah valley. As Sergeant Barknocking him down with a chair.
