Farming in Alberta.

I farmed for five years far up in Central Alberta, Northwest Canada, in one of the best stock countries in the world. It is a mixed timber and prairie land like the park country of Central Minnesota.

Here I found many families living in ease and comfort, with very little effort; ten or fifteen acres sown to oats, a patch of potatoes, a garden, a dozen cows, a couple of hogs, a flock of hens; and they not only lived in comfort, but banked money.

From the valley of the Red Deer, stretching far away to the north and west is a beautiful country, only lacking railroads and good wagon roads to make it one of the finest farming countries in the world.

Now that the hunting season is here, I feel just a little homesick for the sound of the shot gun, the drumming of the partridge and the grouse's cackle and clatter.
