Three Men Are Arrested or Inciting Mutiny Among the Presidentia

their unmarried daughters, Elena Eva after several witnesses had been heard and Zelia; General Blanquet, former minister of war; Senora Blanquet and phy's attorney said he would make an their daughters, General Huerta board ed the German cruiser Dresden.

Another delay has occurred in the departure of the other Mexican refu gees. The steamship Mexico, on which they had expected to sail to join Huerta, it was announced, is not com ing, and this apparently leaves as the next opportunity for departure the Buenos Ayres, on Thursday. That vessel does not touch at Jamaica, unless by special arrangement, but does call at Vera Cruz, an incident that may be distasteful to most of the Mexicans marooned. Virtually all of them are still aboard the British cruiser Briston and are too nervous to step on

There was much more in taking the refugees aboard the Bristol than mere courtesy. The scare caused by the reported Constitutionalist plan to attack the town still prevailed, though many professed to laugh at it. More serious in its consequences was an other report, which resulted in the arrest of a lieutenant, a sergeant and one citizen. This was that these threa men had been attempting to incite to mutiny the presidential guard, a small detachment of which remained until the last, and even to assassinate General Huerta and General Blanquet. It was feared that an attack by the rebels would lead to serious fighting and perhaps a cassacre if the rebels should be victorious. The soldiers of Huertas' bodyguard, who were not sent back to Mexico City, threw away their uniforms and disappeared in the forest as soon as the last of the Huerta party had gone aboard ship.

The reported plot to assassinate him did not seem to worry Huerta. Shortly dary as to what to do with the gifts, before he embarked an officer approached him and asked what disposition should be made of three prisoners. General Blanquet suggested that they be shot at once.

"Oh, let them go," said Huerta with been threatened so often that I have lost all interest in these plots."

Carvajal Opposed to Full Surrender. Provisional President Francisco Carvajal of Mexico does not intend to trate military forces and resist an in vasion rather than permit the Constitutionalists to enter Mexico City with out previous agreement not to wreak vengeance on the lives and property of those who had supported General

This was the information received from authoritative sources in Mexico City by Washington diplomats. It in stroyed, but part of the contents were duced pesimism in some quarters over the possibility of an amicable settle ment of the revolution.

Another aspect of the situation that was commented upon was that Car ranza, while informing the American awaer of their peril. consul at Monterey that he would receive a commission from Carvajal, made it plain that he would do so only to arrange for unconditional surren-

Fear is still felt that Villa will carry his quarrel with General Carranza to safety through the smoke, and his son the point of revolt, and will plunge Mexico into a new civil war far more bitter than the one just ending. At the Constitutionalist junta the official denials of trouble with Villa were less emphatic than heretofore. Friends of Villa weer more confident in their assertions that Villa would "get what he wants or put them in a hole."
