Against Cell-Block Plan in New State Penitentiary.

Influence is being brought to bear upon the Legislature and Governor Brumbaugh to prevent the old cell-block plan being used as a main unit for the housing of prisoners in the new western penitentiary, in Benner township, Centre county, now in course of construction.

With other agencies, the Public Charities Association of Pennsylvania, engaged primarily in the care of the insane and feeble-minded, has turned its attention to the new western penitentiary, and hopes to see corrective measures taken before it is too late.

Prison experts said that, if the present plan goes through, Pennsylvania will be in the ridiculous position of having obtained an ideal location for a modern prison and then thrown its opportunity away by constructing on this site buildings of the type in use in medieval times and no longer believed in by any of the leading prison experts of the country.
