The Adjournment Resolution.

The fixing of a date for the final adjournment of the Legislature at this time can hardly be characterized as a trick of the machine but it indicates a gradual return to the methods in vogue when the machine was paramount. Then it was the custom to fix the date of adjournment in the caucus the night before the session began. This year the body was well into the third month of its work before the matter was taken up. Little has been done thus far, it is true. Only one bill, the deficiency appropriation, had gone to the Governor before the resolution to adjourn had been introduced. But it may be assumed that it is not the intention to enact much legislation this year.

Besides something like an adjournment date was necessary to spur the Legislature into action. During the time since the first week in January when the session opened the Senate has held a couple of sittings a week, with an exception now and then to enable the leaders to run down to Florida for conference, and the House has been in operation two or three days a week. But little progress has been made with legislation. The committees may have been busy but there is no record of the achievements in those secret chambers. But that is usually the case. After the measures leave the committees they are put on the toboggan and rushed. That system makes it easier for the machine. The action of the Governor in delaying consideration of the local option bill was perplexing, moreover. Usually legislation that is badly wanted is pushed forward by its friends so as to assure ample time for debate and deliberation. But Governor BRUMBAUGH, who is sponsor for the local option bill, intervened to prevent its early consideration. Probably its more earnest but less sophisticated friends supported the adjournment resolution in order to get the measure on the calendar. Be that as it may the resolution is an admonition to the Governor and others concerned in the legislation to get a move on themselves. But there is plenty of at her late home at 1.30 o'clock on Suntime if there is desire.
