

Eastland's Dead List, 1201.

Divers Say About 200 Bodies Are Still in Hull and Cannot be Taken Out Until Vessel is Raised.

The official number of bodies recovered from the steamer Eastland at Chicago as given by Coroner Hoffman, was 817. The carefully checked list of the missing prepared by the Western Electric Company contain 84 names and was slowly being increased. This brings the approximate loss of life to 1201.

Divers engaged in rescue work reported to Coroner Hoffman that they believed there were about 200 bodies still in the hull, many of which are in such a position they cannot be taken out until the vessel is raised.

Plans for raising the steamer are all complete. When wrecking dredges have placed the steamer on its keel the hull will be pumped out and a careful search made for more bodies.

It will take several days to raise the steamer. Dynamite will then be used in the river bed to release those bodies which may be stuck in the mud.

The city council, at a special meeting decided to investigate the disaster. The resolution delegated the committee on harbors, wharves and bridges to conduct the inquiry.

The council also passed resolutions calling upon the citizens to contribute to the extent of their means to a relief fund. The fund has passed the $150,000 mark.

The alderman in another resolution asked Secretary of Commerce Redfield to name a special commission to conduct the government investigation of the Eastland.

The first funeral services for the Eastland victims took place on Monday, when more than 300 corteges passed through the streets of the city. Arrangements have been made to hold services for some of the various victims every day of this week.

In several instances the same service was held over two or three victims, members of the same family.

Various theories as to what caused the Eastland to turn over were discussed, but without prospect of a definite explanation being reached until the official inquiries to be taken are finished. The most discussed theories are four:

That the boat was overloaded; that she was not properly ballasted; that a tug that made fast to warp the Eastland from the docks started pulling too soon; that congestion of passengers rushing to the port side, attracted by some passing sensation tipped the steamer over.

Under misty skies, 7000 women and children wended their way to the Clark street dock to fill five large lake steamers with holiday mirth in a trip to Michigan City. The steamer Eastland was the first to be loaded.

Rain began to fall as the wharf superintendents lifted the gang planks from the Eastland, declaring that the government limit of 2500 passengers had been reached. White dresses peeped from raincoats along the shore as those on board waved goodbye to friends on shore waiting to board the steamer Theodore Roosevelt and other vessels.

Then the passengers swarmed to the left side of the ship, as the other steamers drew up the river towards the wharf. A tug was hitched to the Eastland, ropes were ordered cast off and the steamer's engines began to hum. The Eastland had not budged, however. Instead the heavily laden ship wavered sidewise, leaning first towards the river bank. The lurch was so startling that many passengers joined the large concourse already on the river side of the docks.

Screams from passengers attracted the attention of fellow excursionists on the dock awaiting the next steamer. Wharfmens and picknickers soon lined the edge of the embankment, reaching out helplessly towards the wavering steamer.

For nearly five minutes the ship turned before it finally dived under the swift current of the river, which, owing to the drainage canal system, flows from the lake. During the mighty turning of the ship, with its cargo of humanity, lifeboats, chairs and other loose appurtenances on the decks slipped down the sloping floors, crushing the passengers towards the rising waters.

Then there was a plunge with a sigh of air escaping from the hold mingled with crying of children and shrieks of women and the ship was on the bottom of the river, casting hundreds of living creatures to the water.

Many sank, entangled with clothing and bundles, and did not rise, but hundreds came to the surface, seized floating chairs and other objects. Those on shore threw out ropes and straggled in those who could hold these life lines. Employees of commission firms along the river threw crates, chicken coops and other floatable things into the current, but most of these were swept away by the stream, which runs five miles an hour.

Boats put out, tugs rushed to the scene with shrieking whistles and many men snatched off coats and shoes and sprang into the river to aid the drowning. With thousands of sectators ready to aid and the wharf within grasp, hundreds went to death, despite every effort at rescue.

One mother grasped her two children in her arms as she slipped from the steamer into the water. One child was torn from her, but she and the other were saved. Fathers were drowned after aiding their wives and children to safety.

Mrs. William T. Lytle, of Rock Springs, recently figured in a bad runaway and as a result is nursing some painful bruises. With her baby in her arms and a small child by her side she was driving along the back road when the horse frightened and started off at a gallop. Her baby was thrown from her arms but fortunately fell into a mud puddle in the road and was not seriously hurt. Mrs. Lytle was also thrown from the buggy and sustained a number of bad bruises but no broken bones. The other child clung to the rig until the horse was caught, after a mile run.

TEACHERS HAVE A PICNIC.

Eight hundred female teachers who are attending Pennsylvania State College came to this place to-day to camp out in old Tussey mountain gap—just adjoining Pine Grove Mills. They made a grand and beautiful display in marching from the railroad station to the gap, flanked by the males for protection.

It is the sort of picnic where they enjoyed the beautiful rolling landscape in this south western part of old Centre county. They sang songs, played games and amused themselves in a general way, sipping the honey-dew from the flower of delight. They enjoyed the hours in rambling, walking and sporting in the theatre—hours of joy and bliss, and gazed upon the grandest scenes; the land, high rolling to the east and west, old Tussey mountain towering to the sky, the grandest shrine man or woman ever believed. They looked up into the heavens' blue vaults, peeping through the green foliage of the interlacing branches of the noble old forest trees, and wept for joy and exclaimed "Oh! Nature how beautiful thou art! How luxurious, how infinitely tender dost thou appear in this lovely spot in the gap of the mountain." They bared their gentle brows to the zephyr breezes and felt as though passing angels fanned them with their wings. They inhaled the commingled fragrance of the forest land, spruce and pine, and wild flowers, and imagined the fragrance of paradise had stolen back to earth and scented the perfume flung from passing seraphs' mantles.

They looked in youth's bewildered ecstasy upon the gathering methinks beauties and as they gazed upon the trickling stream, shrubbery, trees and rocks, they imagined they heard heaven's looms propelled by aerial beings as they wove the fabric of angels' robes. They saw celestial artists floating on steady wing, producing specimens of the taste and genius of the skies, painting on the royal attire a galaxy of heaven's fine arts for the wondering admiration of mortals on earth. They were in a land shaded from the sun's rays, a land upon which the smiles of heaven beamed with uncommon refulgence, the healthiest spot in the county of Centre, where one breathes rich, pure air, and can take in a sufficient quantity of oxygen into the lungs to oxidize the food for digestion.

These females felt and acted like a bird just escaped from a cage to the bowers of nature. May they be adorned with garlands of gladness meet upon their heads. These female instructors of the rising generation, God bless them!
