> BILL.—In the recent statement of the county auditors appear three items due Centre county, namely: $187.50 from McKean county; $160.60 from Elk county, and $102.60 from Indiana county, all for expenses of conveying convicts who escaped from the new penitentiary at Pittsburgh.

The Legislature of 1913 passed a bill providing that where a prisoner escaped from any penal institution or reformatory in the State and was recaptured he was to be tried for the offense in the county in which such institution is located, but all costs of trial and of his return to the penal institution must be borne by the county from which said prisoner was originally sentenced. The act was passed specifically to protect Centre county against the heavy drain that might result from prisoners escaping from the new penitentiary, their recapture and return to the old institution. The above three items have been paid out by the Centre county commissioners on prisoners who escaped from the three counties mentioned, were captured and returned to the old institution. And now the McKean county commissioners flatly refuse to pay back to Centre county the sum of $187.50. They maintain that they paid the costs in the case originally and that is all they will pay. While the Act of July 22nd, 1913, specifies that such counties must pay, it provides no compulsory means of enforcement, nor any penalties for refusal to comply with same. Centre county can bring suit if it his parents the latter part of next week. wants to against McKean county, but even if it got a verdict it would be no surety of getting the money. So far the Indiana and Elk county bills have not been repudiated.
