

Women Required in Industrial Field.

Glasgow, Scotland.—The Glasgow Advisory Committee is now busy with the task of extending the scope of women's work, as the necessity for keeping the industries of the country going so that exports may be maintained is becoming more and more pressing. The ranks of the industrial, commercial and professional classes have been greatly depleted owing to the war, and the forthcoming withdrawal of many more men in the near future has rendered it necessary that measures be taken to meet the situation by the extension of the employment of women. Women are now to be found in occupations which two years ago would have been considered quite unsuitable. They are now familiar figures as car conductors, and as munition workers. But the need for workers is equally urgent in the ordinary industries of the country. The Board of Trade has therefore appointed local advisory committees on women's employment. Statistics compiled from the national register show that there is still a very large number of unemployed women, not only in the leisure classes but in the middle and respectable working classes. The advisory committees, formed all over the country, aim not so much at finding labor for munition works or assisting to transfer women from one industry to another, as at discovering and inducing into the ranks of labor those who are not employed. It will be the duty of the committees to discover the labor and acting with employers and labor exchanges to allot the women to the employment most suitable for them. Married women who have previously been trained in industrial work will be asked to return to it. The difficulty of taking a full day's work is being met by some firms, who instead of a ten or twelve hours' day, allow a six or eight hours' spell in cases where it is desired, so that some time may be available for attending to the family. The committee met in Glasgow City Chambers to discuss the work to be done under the scheme. Subcommittees were appointed, one to deal with the demand for labor, one with supply, and a third to look after the welfare of the women by dealing with the question of insufficient traveling facilities to and from their work, and by seeing to their proper lodging. Details of the scheme can be had from the secretary of the Labor Advisory Committee, 104 West George street.

An Exception.

"Complaining never gets you anything," said the man who has a fondness for trite maxims. "Oh, I don't know about that," answered the leap-year husband. "I complained of being lonely once and got a wife."—Birmingham Age-Herald.

A Different View.

"I saw you at the circus, Dobbins." "Yes, the children." "Oh, don't give us the old excuse!" "The children were all away in the country, and I had a chance to take in the show and enjoy myself."—Browning's Magazine.

Sarcasm.

"What is meant by charging an account to profit and loss?" "The word profit in that phrase," said the head bookkeeper, "is sarcasm."—Detroit Free Press.

"320 Acres a Misfortune—640 Acres a Calamity."

In the "American Magazine" is an article on Arnold Martin whose farming system is being investigated by the Government and who is considered the best intensive farmer in America.

"The intensive methods pursued by him are of particular interest," we read. "The land is kept busy from spring until fall. At the last cultivation of potatoes corn is planted between the rows. A full crop of potatoes and a fair crop of corn is produced from the same ground. As many as seven hundred bushels of potatoes and seventy-five bushels of corn are produced from each acre planted in this way.

"After the potatoes ripen the corn keeps the weeds down. By the time the corn needs the ground, the potatoes are ripe and the corn is in the shock before it is time to dig the potatoes. Some parts of the potato patch are sown with millet and sorghum just before the last cultivation. This makes a good crop of feed and does not hurt the potatoes. Squashes are sometimes planted in the same way. The onion patches grow corn and melons, which are planted in rows between the onions.

"Part of the orchard is set with small fruit and part is planted with potatoes and truck. In dry spells all the water that the windmill will pump is used for irrigation, and it is here that the intensive farming reaches its height. The water from the well flows directly to the ditches as pumped. A little manure is scattered in the ditches to prevent washing. The orchard at one time contained 900 pear, 200 cherry, 800 peach and a few apple trees. The trees are planted in straight rows, and between the trees are raspberry bushes, tomatoes, cabbage and sweet potatoes, with beets close by.

"Mr. Martin has said: 'Twenty acres is all I want to farm. That's enough land for any man; 320 acres is a misfortune, and 640 acres is a calamity.'

A Queer Japanese Method of Teaching Morals.

In the "American Magazine" Ray Stannard Baker gives the following account of a curious feature of Japanese school instruction:

"Visiting the Japanese schools in Hawaii several years ago I was impressed with one feature unknown to American schools. This was an interesting series of colored pictures with texts in the Japanese language, illustrating the model conduct expected of Japanese children upon a great variety of occasions. These were distributed about on the walls of the school-rooms and frequently changed. When I expressed my appreciation of this work one of the teachers said: 'How shall a child know how to act unless he is taught? which seemed to be a soundly sensible remark. And yet in America (until recently,) while religious teaching has been barred from the public schools, no substitute involving thorough instruction or morals has been developed. The up-building of moral ideals, upon which character rests, has been left to such incidental and indirect instructions as might come out of the school work. The result is that large numbers of American children—not only those whose home life is poor or whose church connections are weak, but thousands of others—leave school with only the haziest ideas of what is right and what is wrong.'

Right in Line.

"I heard you got badly bitten in that transaction." "Yes, I think it must have been by a land shark."—Baltimore American.

General Goethals to Retire.

Major-General George W. Goethals will give up his post of governor of the Panama Canal Zone on December 1. He has urged that his resignation be accepted in order that he might retire to private life. At a conference between President Wilson and Secretary Baker on July 12 it was decided that his wish should be granted.
