ADDITIONAL LOCAL NEWS.

THEY BELONG TO THE "GENUS called attention to a plague of worms which have been bothering the good women of Linn street the past fortnight or more, and which they believed to be army worms because of their crawling in snake-like, massed formation. To find out just what the worms were Miss Margaret H. Cook wrote to the United States Department of Agriculture, enclosing a sample of the worms and the following is the reply she received: WASHINGTON, July 29.

Dear Madam:

Your letter of July 27th addressed to Doctor L. O. Howard, Chief of this Bureau, has been referred to this office for attention. The specimens which you submit appear to be the larvae or maggots of one of the fungous gnats belonging to the Genus Sciara. These maggots have the habit of massing together and marching in snakelike masses, just as you describe. They are not injurious to grass so far as known and will disappear presently withis about as simple and effective a method of eradication as we could recommend. We are very glad indeed to re-
