Joe warns her against Max. HAPTER XVII-Christine, neglected Palmer, turns to K. who tells her it is only reaction.

CHAPTER XVIII - Sidney discovers that Max is flirting with Carlotta.

By many small kindnesses Sidney had made herself popular. And there was more to it than that. She never shirked. The other girls had the respect for her of one honest worker for another. The episode that had caused her suspension seemed entirely forgotten. They showed her carefully what she was to do; and, because she must know the "why" of everything, they explained as best they could.

It was while she was standing by the great sterilizer that she heard, through an open door, part of a conversation that sent her through the day with her world in revolt.

The talkers were putting the anesthetizing room in readiness for the afternoon. Sidney, waiting for the time to open the sterilizer, was busy for the first time in her hurried morning. with her own thoughts. Because she was very human, there was a little exultation in her mind. What would these girls say when they learned of how things stood between her and their hero. Not shameful. this: the honest pride of a woman in being chosen from many.

The voices were very clear. "She's eating her heart out." "Do you think he has really broken with her?" "Propably not. She knows it's coming; that's all." "Sometimes I have wondered-"

"So have others. She oughtn't to be here, of course. But among so many there is bound to be one now and then who-who isn't quite-'

She hesitated, at a loss for a word, "Did you-did you ever think over that trouble with Miss Page about the medicines? That would have been easy, and like her."

"She hates Miss Page, of course, but I hardly think- If that's true, it was nearly murder."

There were two voices, a young one, full of soft southern inflections, and an older voice, a trifle hard, as from disillusion.

They were working as they talked. Sidney could hear the clatter of bottles on the tray, the scraping of a moved table.

"He was crazy about her last fall." "Miss Page?" (The younger voice, with a thrill in it.)

"Carlotta. Of course this is confidential."

"Surely." "I saw her with him in his car one evening. And on her vacation last summer-" The voices dropped to a whisper Sidney, standing cold and white by the sterilizer, put out a hand to steady herself. So that was it! No wonder Carlotta had hated her. She was ! steady enough in a moment, cool and calm, moving about her work with icecold hands and slightly-narrowed eyes. To a sort of physical nausea was succeeding anger, a blind fury of injured pride. He had been in love with Carlotta and had tired of her. He was bringing her his warmed-over emotions She remembered the bitterness of her month's exile, and its probable cause

Max had stood by her then. Well he might, if he suspected the truth. For just a moment she had an illumi nating flash of Wilson as he really was selfish and self-indulgent, just a trifle too carefully dressed, daring as to eye and speech, with a carefully-calculated daring, frankly pleasure-loving. She put her hands over her eyes.

The voices in the next room had risen above their whisper. "Genius has privileges, of course," said the older voice. "He is a very great surgeon. Tomorrow he is to do the Edwardes operation again. I am glad I am to see him do it."

Sidney still held her hands over her eyes. He was a great surgeon: in his hands he held the keys of life and death. And perhaps he had never cared for Carlotta: she might have thrown herself at him. He was a man, at the mercy of any scheming woman. She tried to summon his image to her aid. But a curious thing happened. She could not visualize him. Instead, there came, clear and distinct, a pic-arms to the chandelier over his head and looking up at her as she stood on the stairs.

CHAPTER XIX.

"But, Sidney, I'm asking you to mar-"I-I know that. I am asking you something else, Max." "I have never been in love with her." His voice was sulky. He had drawn the car close to a bank, and they were sitting in the shade, on the grass. It was the Sunday afternoon after Sidney's experience in the operating room.

"You took her out, Max, didn't you?" "A few times, yes. She seemed to have no friends. I was sorry for her." "That was all?"

"Absolutely. Good heavens, you've put me through a catechism in the last ten minutes!" "If my father were living, or even mother, I-one of them would have had to. I've been very wretched for several days." It was the first encouragement she had given him. There was no coquetry about her aloofness. It was only that her faith in him had had a shock and was slow of reviving. "You are very, very lovely, Sidney. I wonder if you have any idea what you mean to me?" "You meant a great deal to me, too," she said frankly, "until a few days ago. ture of K. Le Moyne in the hall of the I thought you were the greatest man little house, reaching one of his long I had ever known, and the best. And then-I think I'd better tell you what | her to her feet. "You love me, dear." I overheard. I didn't try to hear. It just happened that way."

He listened doggedly to her account of the hospital gossip, doggedly and with a sinking sense of fear, not of the talk, but of Carlotta herself. Usually one might count on the woman's silence, her instinct for self-protection But Carlotta was different. Hang the girl, anyhow! She had known from the start that the affair was a temporary one; he had never pretended anything else.

There was silence for a moment after Sidney finished. Then:

"You are not a child any longer, Sidney. You have learned a great deal in this last year. One of the things you know is that almost every man has small affairs, many of them sometimes, before he finds the woman he wants to marry. When he finds her, the others are all off-there's nothing to them. It's the real thing then, instead of the sham."

"Palmer was very much in love with Christine, and yet-"

"Palmer is a cad." "I don't want you to think I'm making terms. I'm not. But if this thing went on, and I found out afterward that you-that there was anyone else it would kill me."

"Then you care, after all!" There was something boyish in his triumph, in the very gesture with which he held out his arms, like a child who has escaped a whipping. He stood up and, catching her hands, drew pened to her. A year ago her half

"I'm afraid I do. Max."

"Then I'm yours, and only yours, if you want me," he said, and took her in his arms.

He was riotously happy, must hold her off for the joy of drawing her to him again, must pull off her gloves and kiss her soft bare palms. "I love you, love you!" he cried, and bent down to bury his face in the warm hollow of her neck. Sidney glowed under his caress-was rather startled at his passion, a little ashamed. "Tell me you tove me a little bit Say it."

"I love you," said Sidney, and flushed scarlet.

But even in his arms, with the warm sunlight on his radiant face, with his lips to her ear, whispering the divine absurdities of passion, in the back of her obstinate little head was the thought that while she had given him her first embrace, he had held other women in his arms. It made her pas sive, prevented her complete surren

She broke the news of her engage ment to K. herself, the evening of the same day. The little house was quiet when she got out of the car at the door. Harriet was asleep on the couch at the foot of her bed, and Christine's rooms were empty. She went upstairs to the room that had been her mother's, and took off her hat. She wanted to be alone, to realize what had happromise to Joe had gratified her sense of romance. She was loved, and she had thrilled to it. But this was different. Marriage, that had been but a vision then, loomed large, almost menacing. She had learned the law of compensation: that for every joy one pays in suffering Women who married went down into the valley of death for their children. One must love and be loved very ten-

That was the alternative. One married, happily or not as the case might be, and took the risk. Or one stayed single, like Harriet, growing a little hard, exchanging slimness for leanness and austerity of figure, flat-chested, thin-voiced. All at once it seemed very terrible to her. She felt as if she had been caught in an inexorable hand that had closed about her.

Harriet found her a little later, face down on her mother's bed crying as if her heart would break. She scolded her roundly.

"You've been overworking," she said "You've been getting thinner. Your measurements for that suit showed it I have never approved of this hospital training, and after last January-"

She could hardly credit her senses when Sidney, still swollen with weep ing, told her of her engagement.
