Did you ever stop to think what beof an army composed of millions of prices. men? At the outset of the present war much of this was pure loss. Now in the British army there is an "old clothes man" and the profits he re-ports back to his boss, John Bull, might make Morgan, Rockerfeller or The old clothes man "saves the scraps." He makes new things out of old. He cleans up the battlefields and camps and very little is wasted nowadays. His job is to collect everything from a horseshoe nail to a disordered siege-gun and put it back into commission. Brass objects which have lost their usefulness are melted into ingots; cast-iron junk becomes pigiron; bronze, tin, nickle and everything of the kind which has irretrievably lost its shape is put into melting pots to be born again in another guise keeping up an eternal transmigration but serving all the while.

I recently visited one of these scrapsaving and repair shops. About 12,-000 people are employed, mostly French women and girls. Here great howitzers are repaired and government chronometers have their hair-springs readjusted; tents are patched and mended and covers are made for steel helmets; artillery wheels are repaired and micrometers put true again. There is a wood-working shop, a foundry for running brass, bronze, zinc, tin and iron; a boot repair degas mask repair department and In one room there were hundreds and hundreds of rifles. "This is one day's arrivals," the commanding offi-cer explained. "By tonight the room must be cleared to make room for tomorrow's arrivals." Many of the rifles were muddy and rusty as though picked out of the mud on the battlefield. Women were cleaning these. In one corner a soldier was rhythmically swinging the rifles up one by one to a rest and squinting if they were bent or if the rifling was damaged. The officer explained this was obviously the first bit of inspectime to repair other parts of the rifle if the barrel was damaged.

These rifles pass on down the line. When they reach the end they are as good as new and after being oiled are packed in boxes and shipped back to the front.

> 100,000 Troops in Europe by First of Year.

Six hundred thousand Sammies is the largest number the United States can send abroad by September, 1918. This was stated semi-officially along with the declaration that not more than 100,000 men can be in Europe by next January. The first of the new national army will scarcely be in cantonments before October 1, at the present rate of camp construction. It takes practically a year to turn a civilian into a good soldier. Hence the second section of the new national army will not be called before next summer, it is believed.

Lack of shipping facilities with which to move the troops across the Atlantic is the reason for the pessimistic outlook. Meantime, however, all speed will be used in getting the first drafted troops into khaki and training camps. It was settled rigid military law applies to drafted men as soon as they are notified, "held for service."

Unless plans are changed offices of local boards will be the rendezvous. Upon notification men for the first. levy will assemble at this rendezvous and start to the cantonment.

The War Department in debating whether to send them to the camps in charge of military officers, or allow them to go "on their honor." The Department inclines toward the latter

If any men summoned to the rendezvous fail to appear a squad of sol-diers will be sent to bring them. They are then liable to penalty for absence without leave. In case the evasion continues they become deserters. Drafted men will be sent to camp with men of their own State and to the nearest possible camp. General Crowder declared the news papers were his greatest aids in the registration and draft.
