DOWN NITTANY VALLEY.

The apple crop down Nittany valley is short this year, and there will not be the usual amount of apple butter boiled, but cabbage and potatoes are a fair crop and there is a lot of kraut being made.
Mrs. J. H. Beck, of Nittany, and Miss Verna Dornblazer, of Clintondale, spent the past week in Lewistown, attending the Woman's Missionary convention of the Lutheran central synod of Penna., as delegates from their respective churches. They report a good attendance and an interesting and profitable convention.
The Walker township road fund has been increased by the sum of over $300.00 from fines for excess of speed limit by motorists. The state constabulary have returned some thirty-five parties to date, and Justice Woodring collected the fines and paid them over to the township treasurer. There is too much reckless running on the state road through the valley and there will be more fatal accidents if there is no check on speed limit.

Mr. Adam Fravel, residing on the Charles Decker farm, had a right collar bone broken one day last week by a horse crowding him against a post in the stable. Dr. Kurtz, of Howard, put his shoulder in shape and Mr. Fravel is doing nicely but suffers considerable pain. His neighbors finished sowing his grain and have been cutting his corn and raising his potatoes. Mr. Fravel has the sympathy of the whole community in his affliction.

Plank, and her aunt, Mrs. Masten, in Pittsburgh. Her uncle Walter and family had been east to Washington and Philadelphia on an auto trip, going home by way of Nittany. Miriam and John D. Beck accompanied them to their home but John returned in a few days to take up his work as a Junior at State.

Speaking about automobiles, Mr. L. E. Swartz, of Hublersburg, has a chunk of a dog which is a confirmed automobile chaser. He will chase an auto on a busy day until he meets one going in the opposite direction then will turn and chase it back. But he simply will not chase a Ford. Linc says he never knew him to chase a Ford and neighbors who have watched him declare this to be true. He will chase any other make down the road and if a Ford happens to be coming up will take a squirt at it, drop his ears and trot back home. Linc says he does not know whether he considers them beneath his notice or whether he has learned about Henry Ford's peace endeavor, but he cannot explain his actions.

Illuminating Gas is Fuel for London Buses.

Old Mother Necessity has produced another invention and this time one of such unusual appearance that not only is it described and illustrated in the October number of Popular Mechanics Magazine, but also pictured in color on the cover. The shortage of gasoline and methyl alcohol in Europe and the vital necessity of conserving the available supply for military purposes have brought about the use of illuminating gas as a fuel for motor busses operating between London and some of its suburbs. Bags that resemble small captive balloons are anchored to the tops of the big cars and inflated by pumps at filling stations that have been established along the routes of travel. Certain of these are understood to be merely lamp-posts conveniently situated at the curbs. The plan obviously has necessitated certain mechanical changes in the engines which, at least, involve the carburetors, besides the feeding and compression systems. The amount of power obtained from the lighting gas depends upon a number of things, and a reliable estimate could not be made without more detailed information than is at hand. It is also not altogether clear why unwieldy bags are being used instead of compact steel cylinders which could carry gas under high pressure. Although, at first thought, it seems that there might be danger of accidental ignition, this is undoubtedly avoided by providing fireproof covers for the bags.

Some proprietors of Coney Island amusement resorts have attempted the practice of admitting persons free to their places and charging them 10 cents at the exit gates, thus expecting to avoid payment of the war tax on admission tickets.

Bananas for Enlisted Men.

Boston.—Thousands of bunches of bananas were given away because of an accident to the refrigerating machinery of the steamer that brought them here. Two car loads were sent to Camp Devon, the National army cantonment at Ayrer; boatloads were sent to the navy yard and the Naval Reserve training station, and many more were given to local institutions and charities.
The United Fruit company asked that the fruit be condemned and dumped in the harbor. City officials, however, refused to do this, and Mayor Curley sent a telegram to Herbert C. Hoover in which he charged the company with attempting to destroy the fruit to maintain high prices. As a result of the city's refusal to condemn the bananas, the company decided to give them away.

It is said the largest tree known, in thickness, is a partly decayed chestnut in Sicily, which is 60 feet across. The Mexican cypress and the Oriental plane have reached 40 feet. This puts the California big tree and the baobab in the background, but the big tree is of greater bulk in combined height and girth and the baobab is thickest in relation to height.

The National Automobile Chamber of Commerce says that 40 per cent of the automobiles sold thus far this year, in the United States, have been bought by farmers. This, in a degree, shows why is profiting by war-time prices. The farming community ought to be a fertile field for the Liberty Bond salesmen this fall.—The Monitor.

How Animals Fight.

Animals of different species do not often fight one another, because they cannot comprehend or guard against an attack different from that used by one of their own kind. The predatory beasts in many cases overcome their prey, not because they are very much stronger, but because of their fear and confusion that their strange method of attack arouses in their quarry.
For example, a dog of a fighting breed charges like a lion, and nearly every member of the deer tribe, including even the elk and the moose, flies from him in panic, but when one of these animals learn the real power of a dog, it is a different matter.

Mr. Hobart Ames kept a number of deer in a park at his winter home in Tennessee, among them a buck with a fine set of horns. The buck came to a great contempt and dislike for dogs, and any unfortunate dog that got into the deer enclosure did well to escape with his life. The buck had learned that no dog could withstand his charge or the thrust of his horns, and running from them was the last thing he thought of. On the other hand, the dogs were greatly puzzled by an animal that ought by all rules to run away, but did not.
One night the big buck jumped out of his yard, and Mr. Ames's foreman put the dogs on the deer's track. They found him in a thicket a quarter of a mile from the house. There was a fight, and then the dogs were seen coming home at top speed followed by the enraged buck. His hair was turned the wrong way, and his eyes burned redly as he charged every dog he could overtake. Several of the hounds were badly hurt, and all of them were scared. They fled to their own quarters, and it required the combined efforts of the kennel men and the stable boys to rescue the pack. Probably if a single one of those hounds had learned to fight a deer at bay, his example would have been followed by his mates, with results highly disconcerting to the buck.
A thoroughbred game rooster will fight almost anything that comes in his way, yet a correspondent of The Companion once saw one worsted by an old guinea hen. The cock had been accustomed to lording it over the guineas, and to chase them about the yard. In an evil day for him, the old hen started across the yard with her brood of day old chicks. Knowing what her temper would be, children and dogs kept out of her way, but the rooster was a cocksure chap. He ran up to the guinea hen, ruffed his feathers, and set himself to deliver a knock-out blow. The hen did not wait for him to get set, but fairly flew at him, kept herself in the air about his head by the use of her wings, and fairly smothered him with a rain of scratches, pecks and wing strokes. Dumfounded such an incomprehensible mode of fighting, the gamecock took refuge under the corner, where he remained until the storm blew over.
Two boys on a farm once owned a lamb, which they taught to butt. The youngster of course gained rapidly in skill and daring. Neither pigs, calves, cows or horses were safe from him. His greatest delight was to wait until the colored hired man began to milk, when he would withdraw an unusual distance and come on like a battering ram. Naturally, things immediately happened to the cow, the bucket of milk, and the milkman. Eventually, the ram aimed most of his attacks at the squinting eyes of the man, and then, by an easy process of association, took to "landing on" every crouching figure that he saw. When he charged one of his young masters whom he happened to see in that attitude one day, the boys decided that they must cure him of his bad habit.
The only animal on the place that the sheep feared was the white bull terrier. Knocking that dog off his feet did nothing more than provoke his temper, and the resulting contest never ended in favor of the ram. The sheep soon learned wisdom, and nothing could provoke him into charging the dog. The lady dressed the terrier in one of her coats, and tied a hat on him, and forced him to sit down on the milking stool, where they left him.
Billy Button was soon attracted by the figure seated on the milking stool. He gave one glance, raised himself on his hind legs, shook his head menacingly, and came on. Half-blinded by that, the dog took the blow, and a more surprised or more enraged terrier has rarely been seen. Handicapped as he was, he flew at the sheep, fastened his teeth, and held on. By the time the boys had got the dog off, Billy had learned his lesson—nevermore would he attack a crouching figure that looked like a man, but might prove to be a white bull terrier.—Youth's Companion.

Too Many Instructions.

One of the men in an officers' training corps was poring over a manual of instructions for officers. He was trying to memorize the proper units and equipment called for in a division and he studied until his head ached and then laid aside the volume in disgust.
"I don't see what the army needs with this division business, anyhow!" he grumbled. "What it needs is multiplication and addition!"

A new idea in danger signals is the checkerboard system installed by the Columbus Automobile Club, Columbus, Ohio. At dangerous intersections are placed boards three by six feet, painted in alternate squares of black and white, to attract the eye of drivers and serve as warning. The boards are to be equipped with red lights so as to be conspicuous by night as well as by day.

Hood's Sarsaparilla.

Nux, Iron, Pepsin and Sarsaparilla

The combination of two great medicines, Hood's Sarsaparilla and Peptiron, by taking them in conjunction, one before eating and the other after, brings into co-operation the above-named substances, best for the blood, nerves and digestive organs. This combination is especially recommended in cases that are scrofulous, or rheumatic, anemic and nervous, or where the blood is both impure and pale, deficient in iron—one of the most common disease conditions of the present day.
In cases where a laxative is needed, Hood's Pills should be taken. They work in perfect harmony with Hood's Sarsaparilla and Peptiron, and are mild and efficient. 62-37
