AMERICANS MEET GERMANS.

U. S. Troops Almost Wipe Out Assaulting Party.
 American troops repulsed a strong German attack early last Friday morning in the salient north of Toul. A number of Americans were killed and wounded but the Germans paid dear for their experience as very few of them escaped. It was the hottest engagement the U. S. troops have been in so far, but the morale they displayed was fine.

A driving wet snow was falling when the Germans opened fire on the American salient with every weapon at their command. Seventy-sevens, heavy shells and gas shells fell in a perfect whirlwind on the trenches for half an hour. At the same time other enemy shells in great numbers were dropping on the American battery positions.

The Germans, evidently thinking that the Americans in that section, having had one taste of gas a few days previous, would fear it now, let loose great quantities of poisonous gas, but the men put on their masks and only a few were affected by it. So intense was the fire that the woods back of the salient were shot to pieces.

At 6 o'clock the barrage fire lifted on the trenches to the right of the salient and Germans numbering 240 came sweeping forward under the protection of their fire. They came forward apparently intending to make a big haul and jumped into what was left of the trenches, but there, instead of the easy time anticipated, found the Americans all ready for battle. Fierce hand-to-hand fighting began.

One American officer raised men with rifles and machine guns and went through the American entanglements into No Man's Land and there waited for the enemy, whom he expected to be driven out by his comrades in the trenches.

He was right, for soon groups of the enemy started back through the wire entanglements. The Americans poured in a deadly fire, and few Germans escaped back to their lines.

While the Americans were in front of the wire entanglements and in shell holes, still fighting desperately, the American barrage fire began sweeping No Man's Land, catching many running Prussians who had enough of American methods. The barrage swept back and forth making sure of doing all possible damage to the foe.

When the enemy had been driven back out of the positions the bodies of 10 German soldiers were found in the American trenches. Two German officers were entangled in the wire and many bodies were in sight. Eight were visible through the snowstorm at one point. The ground was littered with enemy hand grenades, boxes of explosives for destroying dugouts and incendiary bombs which they had no opportunity to use. Three German prisoners were taken, and they confessed that they had been planning for the attack for a month and had hoped to pierce the allies line, not figuring on such stubborn resistance by the American troops.

War-time Operating

In the present extraordinary situation there is one feature of Bell Telephone traffic operation that is brought to particular public notice.

Calls for numbers that have been disconnected, for party-line numbers that have been changed, and certain other local calls that cannot be completed by the first answering operator, are referred to what are known as "Special Operators."

The latter are provided with ample records making possible the establishment of desired connections with the least possible delay; and it is urged that the public co-operate with them, evidencing consideration and patience when factors outside the control of the answering operator necessitate the referring of calls to a Special Operator.
