Shortly afterwards the Finberg Bros. sold the mine for $20,-000, and it was then Meyer brought sait to recover something for himself. The court heard the testimony and will give a decision in due time.

On Wednesday testimony was taken in the case of G. B. Bassett Jr., vs. the Curtin Forge Co. From the testimony it appears that the plaintiff had made an agreement with defendants wherein they were to furnish him 2000 tons of charcoal iron. They shipped 900 tons and were doing so at a loss when they notified him that they could give him only 2000 pounds more. On the strength of that notification the plaintiff withheld payment on the two last cars he had received and also got out an injunction restraining the company from selling its iron in any other market. After hearing the testimony the court intimated that it was just possible he would dissolve the injunction but so far has given no decision.
