War to Make Men Scarcer. There won't be enough men to go around if the war lasts for more than a year longer. That's the dire prophecy of an Italian professor of sociology and statistics, who has just published a learned work, entitled "The War and Population."

He figures that if the war ends in 1919 there will be 121 women between the ages of 20 and 44 to every 100 men of the same ages in England. In 1910 the proportion was 108 to 100. In France the situation will be even more dreadful. There will be 124 women to every 100 men. In Germany, where the sexes were almost evenly balanced before the war, there will be only 19 surplus women to every 100 men—hardly enough, the author says, to make polygamy practical.

The scientist holds that the comfortable doctrine that eugenically the race will improve after the war, because there will be so many women for every man to choose a wife from that he will choose the healthiest, handsomest and strongest. The young men will be remarkably fit, says the author, because even though disabled by wounds and mutilations, they will be worthy to carry on the race, owing to their hygienic life in the open and the salutary discipline of army life.—Ex.

U. S. Takes the Wires. On the 1st of August the wire communication system of the country passed quietly under control of the government. For the immediate present, officials say there will be few changes in the method of operation. Administration will be through the same channels as before and by the same executive officers. Any changes the government undertakes will be with their assistance.

The Postmaster General and David J. Lewis, who is to be directly in charge of the wires under him, are proceeding slowly in mapping out the alterations they planned. They are studying the policies of the companies and their methods of operation. A series of conferences have been held with representatives of the companies concerned. Steps are to be taken within a short time to consolidate competing companies but in this the government will proceed slowly. Officials said a mass of details remain to be worked out before action can be taken.

New Wheat Substitute. The United States Agricultural Department has recently received notice of the successful completion in North Carolina of a plant for making soya bean flour for the market. This fact is of interest to members of the American Chemical society and is most significant in view of the present day need for substitutes for wheat flour. Chemical experiments show that this new flour has a larger amount of protein than wheat and is, therefore, of greater nutritive value. It is about the same price as wheat and, like most of the wheat substitutes is dark in color. The manufacture of soya bean flour does not necessitate great expenditures for machinery, as cottonseed oil plants may be utilized for crushing the seed and extracting the oil. The only additional machinery is that needed for converting the meal cake into the flour.

The United States Food Administration endorses this substitute and a health magazine says of it in a single season, "An organized effort, the kind of Southwest can produce, by means of soya bean, enough fats to equal the annual production of meat and animal fats."

Housekeepers will not hesitate to use soya bean flour when they know that it is not an entirely new product, but the Nashville Agricultural and Normal Institute has used it for the past thirteen years.
