The American Army University, the largest university in the English-speaking world, has been opened in Beaunay, southeast of Paris. Fifteen thousand soldiers have enrolled for a three month's course. The faculty of 500 members, chiefly drawn from the American Expedition Forces, is headed by Col. Ira I. Reeves, formerly president of Norwich University in Vermont. The buildings now serving as study halls and the dormitories were used during the war as an American hospital. A farm of 600 acres is used as the main agricultural college, while former workshops of the hospital supply headquarters are being utilized by classes in engineering. The university has opened a branch at Bellevue, near Versailles, for nearly 1,000 students of art and architecture. The American Army University is one of the four features of the educational system introduced for the benefit of the Expeditionary Force. The other features are: Post schools in all organizations for industrial work, divisional headquarters in all Army corps and divisions for vocational training and general education of high school graduates, and the detail of officers and special training, and organized the Student's Army Training Corps in American colleges. Approximately 250 American educators who have been sent overseas in the last few months, and with about 200 educational secretaries previously sent by the U. S. C. A., they make up the administrative staff. Most of the teachers however, are taken from the Army.—Ex.

THANKS TO LUCIA.

(Continued from page 2, Col. 2.) ev and everybody knew that he was some day to inherit all his fortune, it was not fair that he should not get any of it because his uncle thought he had been drowned. So I went to Mr. Culpepper, Mrs. Smith's lawyer, and asked him if he could not get the money back, since there had been a mistake. He found that uncle Saltonstall had left over two million dollars to three distant cousins, so he persuaded them to divide with father. Mr. Culpepper came and told us about it this morning after you had gone. Isn't it nice, Mr. Brown?" "I believe I told you once, Elliot, that you need not worry about Lucia," I said. Lucia slipped up to me that evening as I was sitting on the beach, making mental notes of the moon. She took my hand and laid her soft cheek against the back of it. "If it had not been for Wade, I think that I should have married you, Mr. Brown," she said. "There is absolutely no doubt about it, my dear," I answered sadly. "I loved Wade from the moment I first saw him," she said, "but I did not believe that I could love him as much as I do now. That must be because he is blind to everybody but me."

"He certainly is," I agreed. "I might have married you just the same, though," she continued, "if I had not been able to dispose of father and Suzanne, because I should not have wished to leave father alone, as he is such a child, and it would not have been quite fair to Suzanne, as she counted on marrying Wade and has very little money of her own. You see, I thought of all this, and that day we first went to the Smiths for tea and I saw how father was watching her, I told her that you said father was going to be the leading portrait-painter of America." "But I hadn't said anything of the sort," I protested.

"I know it," Lucia answered, "but sometimes you have to anticipate a little to make things come out properly. Suzanne took more interest in him then, and pretty soon I got a chance to suggest to father that I thought she would be willing to sit for her portrait if he were to ask her." I turned and stared at this sweet and simple child of nature who had first seen the light and grown to womanhood on a jumbled heap of volcanic rock. Here in the pretty figure at my side was the outcrop of her sane French ancestry and uncle Saltonstall. We were silent for a moment; then Lucia said pensively: "After all, if you really know what you want, all you have to do is to go and get it." "Yes, my dear," I admitted; "that is all."—By Henry C. "I have been afflicted with a bad case of rheumatism. I had severe pains shooting through my muscles and joints, I was run down and in bad shape. If you have shortness of breath, headaches, your heart skips beats, your tongue is always coated, feel hungry but cannot get any benefit from your food and it sours and ferments, forming gas and wind on your stomach, Goldine will surely relieve you.
